The final decades leading up to the twentieth century were witness to major transitions in social, religious and political life in America. The Jewish community of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, was a major center of activity during these years. In 1887, members of Philadelphia's traditional Jewish elite organized and published the first issue of the Jewish Exponent. With this initial edition of the newspaper, the Philadelphia Jewish community had a forum in which to publish its opinions about concerns facing their city and their way of life.

The major effort of this thesis was a two year project to create a computerized database index of the extant articles in the first twelve and a half years of the printing of the Jewish Exponent. To the author's knowledge, no such index existed prior to this one. The primary function of the database index is to facilitate the researching of articles contained in the Exponent. It can be used to conduct a wide variety of searches which will retrieve articles related to the search criteria.

The opening chapter offers an overview of Jewish life in Philadelphia, introduces the influential leaders in the community, and outlines the importance of the Jewish Exponent. Significant factors influencing the Jewish community of Philadelphia are also discussed.

Chapters two and three represent efforts to illustrate the application of the computerized index. In chapter two I have focused attention on the issues and concerns related to the development of the Reform Movement and the impact which it had on the traditional Jewish community of Philadelphia. Using the database as the primary source of data collection, I was able to demonstrate how easy it is to find articles which met a very specific set of search requirements. In this chapter, I was able to find every database entry related to Reform Judaism, as well as articles which related to the specific organizations and institutions of the Reform Movement. After gathering the articles which satisfied the search request, it was then possible to further manipulate the entries retrieved to examine trends, concerns, frequency of authorship and general community opinion.

Chapter three functioned similarly as chapter two, in that its main goal was to demonstrate the utility of the database search index. The focus of the information collected for this chapter related to issues and concerns regarding immigrants, immigration and the associations and organizations established for the purpose of assisting those arriving to Philadelphia.

Numerous appendices have been included with this thesis to provide examples of possible search routines. The computerized database has also been included for use on an IBM compatible computer system.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Throughout my years at the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion, I have had the pleasure of studying with many great scholars – both faculty and students alike. I owe much to all of them for standing by me when I needed them most and for helping me get the help I needed during a difficult period. I especially wish to express thanks to Rabbi Aaron Bisno (Cincinnati, '96) who helped me understand that there was no shame in admitting I needed the help.

The greatest teaching I know has come from my parents who have always stood by me, encouraged me and instilled within me the deepest love of Judaism. They will always know more than me. I will always appreciate that.

The immense size of this thesis is testimony to the countless hours spent reading volumes of poorly photographed microfilm and processing that information into a form usable for this project. There were many days that I thought this project would never be completed. Thanks to the support of my parents (and a bit of nagging) this "little book report," as my brother affectionately refers to it, is now finished.

I would like to thank Rick Hedrick for his assistance in gathering materials for my research. A special thank you is due to the media staff at the University of Cincinnati Langsam Library for coming to my rescue when the microfilm machines would not accept my dimes.

Karla Goldman has been my advisor and guide throughout this long process. She has pushed me to examine my work more critically and forced me to take greater pride in my accomplishments. I thank her for her patience, understanding and, especially, her high expectations.

My wife, Shelley, did not really know what she was getting herself into when we married nine months before this thesis was due. I thank her for maintaining a sense of humor when everything seemed hopeless. Shelley, I love you, and I could never have completed this project without your help (or your constant subtle reminders to get back to work).

Bruce, your sarcasm, cynicism, humor and shoulders to cry on make you one of my lifetime heroes. I love you more than you could possibly know. Every time I thought there was no light at the end of the tunnel, you would find the switch and turn it on. I will remember that for the rest of my life.

Chapter 1: Introduction

On April 15, 1887, the Jewish community of Philadelphia was introduced to a new weekly Jewish newspaper.[1] The Jewish Exponent was, for a time, seen as just another newspaper coming to a city which had seen other Jewish weeklies come and go. Prior to the Exponent's publication, the leading Jewish paper in the city was Isaac Leeser's Occident and American Jewish Advocate.[2] Leeser's paper was published monthly for twenty-five years (one year as a weekly) and was dedicated to defending Judaism and the Jews. After Leeser's death in 1868, Mayer Sulzberger edited the Occident for one year. The Occident's final edition was printed in March, 1869.[3] The Exponent, however, was determined to be different – and to endure. So it has for nearly 110 years.

The Jewish Exponent was viewed by local businessmen, merchants and the young editorial staff as an opportunity to bring Jewish life into the mainstream; as English had become the language of the American press, the Exponent would help to disseminate information about the Jewish community to both the core Jewish population who subscribed to the newspaper as well as the general public interested in such cosmopolitan affairs. With the help of a new generation of editors and financiers, this English-language Jewish weekly, would endeavor to succeed as the next influential voice of the American-Jewish public. Inasmuch as the Jewish Exponent was owned neither by a private company or any single entity, a stock company was formed at the Mercantile Club on April 12, 1887, with 43 of Philadelphia's most prominent Jews swearing their financial support.[4] Among these were names familiar to anyone versed in Philadelphia's Jewish history: Benjamin Teller, a real estate broker, was named president; Simon Muhr, a jewelry plant owner, was treasurer. Additional support for the paper was received from such notables as Moses A. Dropsie, William B. Hackenberg, Louis E. Levy and Mayer Sulzberger.[5] Those directly responsible for the paper's content were Henry S. Morais (Editor 1887-1898), Charles Hoffman (Editor 1887-1907) and Melvin G. Winstock (Editor 1887-1898). Nathan Billstein was appointed to keep the board of stockholders apprised of the activities of the editorial staff and served from 1887 to 1900, when he was replaced by Mr. Felix N. Gerson who served until 1944.[6]

The first issue of the Jewish Exponent, a journal, as was proclaimed in the original prospectus, "devoted to the interests of the Jewish people," consisted of 14 pages.[7] In its packed columns were advertisements promoting the products and services of the major shareholders, sermons of the local rabbis, news of foreign and national events, descriptions of the activities of the city's six major synagogues and information about the general Jewish community of Philadelphia.

Thanks to the numerous outstanding contributors, the Jewish Exponent quickly became well known and widely read. Those who received this paper availed themselves of the opinions and commentaries of such notable figures as Cyrus Adler, Solomon Solis-Cohen, Mayer Sulzberger and Moses A. Dropsie. These four represent the character of the majority of the newspaper's contributors. Both Solomon Solis-Cohen (1848-1854) and Moses A. Dropsie (1862-1870) served as presidents of the Philadelphia Hebrew Education Society. Mayer Sulzberger, Solomon Solis-Cohen and Cyrus Adler held teaching posts with the Society as well.[8] Adding to their credibility as notable figures, all four were consistently involved in areas of politics, education and religion.

Dr. Adler, president of the American Jewish Historical Society, and secretary of the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C., was the first president and organizer of Dropsie College for Hebrew and Cognate Learning, founded in 1907, two years after the death of Moses Dropsie; a college envisioned by Moses Dropsie as a free institution for all to study Hebrew regardless of creed, color or sex.[9] Dr. Adler also served as a president of Mickve Israel Congregation and the Jewish Theological Seminary.

Dr. Solomon Solis-Cohen served as the first chairman of Gratz College, the first Hebrew teachers' training school in the United States.[10] He also served as a president of the Board of Education and as a successor to Mayer Sulzberger as president of the Philadelphia Young Men's and Young Women's Hebrew Association, founded in 1875. In 1888, with the help of Rabbi Joseph Krauskopf, of Keneseth Israel, Dr. Solis-Cohen founded the Jewish Publication Society of America. Perhaps Dr. Cohen's most notable achievement came in 1879 when, at the age of twenty-two he helped found the journal, the American Hebrew. Among the major issues discussed in this not-for-profit, twenty-six page weekly journal was Solis-Cohen's opposition to Reform Judaism and his concerns regarding immigration. His opinions were frequently printed throughout the pages of the Jewish Exponent.[11]

By the middle of the nineteenth century, Philadelphia had grown to be the most intellectually and religiously vigorous city in the nation, playing the role that New York would eventually play in the twentieth century. There were five pre-Civil War synagogues in Philadelphia. Mickve Israel, the first religious assembly in the State of Pennsylvania, was the oldest. While records indicate that the Jewish community organized the assembly as early as the 1740s, construction of Mickve Israel's first synagogue did not begin until 1782.[12] Sephardic in ritual, it served as the religious center of the majority of Philadelphia's elite Jews from its beginning until well into the twentieth century. Rodeph Shalom, the first Ashkenazic congregation in America, was founded in 1795. Beth Israel, known as the Polish Synagogue for many years, was formed in 1840. Keneseth Israel, the first Reform synagogue in the city was founded in 1847. Congregation Adath Jeshurun was the last in this group, formed in 1859. These congregations, and their spiritual leaders, set, and reflected, the style and tone of the Philadelphia Jewish community. In 1887, the same year that the Jewish Exponent published its first issue, Rabbi Joseph Krauskopf, who was ordained from the Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati in 1883, was appointed the spiritual leader of Keneseth Israel in Philadelphia. Shortly thereafter, in 1897, Rev. Sabato Morais, the traditionalist rabbi of Mickve Israel, died, leaving Krauskopf and other Reform rabbis to be the major spokemen for Philadelphia Jewry. During the period about which this thesis is concerned, Rabbi Joseph Krauskopf either wrote or was written about in 138 articles printed in the Jewish Exponent.

In 1892, Rodef Shalom Congregation appointed Henry Berkowitz as its rabbi, where he remained for the next thirty years, gradually bringing his congregation into the Reform movement. Coincidentally, Krauskopf had married Berkowitz's sister and the rabbis worked closely together, eventually establishing "joint services, joint Sunday Schools and joint efforts in behalf of Reform Judaism."[13]

Religious concerns such as synagogue attendance and general apathy were regularly reported by the Jewish Exponent. In the earliest years of the paper's success, the Jewish community witnessed the development of the Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati, the Central Conference of American Rabbis and the Union of American Hebrew Congregations – all three organizations emblematic of the significant progress of the Reform movement in America. The staff of the Exponent as well as its intended audience were not at all pleased with the strides made in the growth of this liberal branch of Judaism. Although the paper tried diligently to maintain no bias while reporting, on questions concerning specific Jewish matters its policy was decidedly conservative in nature.[14] In fact, almost every mention of the Reform movement in the Exponent opened the door for anti-Reform commentary and editorial response. In contrast, when the Jewish Theological Seminary was opened in 1887, the Exponent and its readership went to great lengths to show their support and reverence for this conservative rabbinic institution. Later in this work, closer examination of specific articles printed by the paper relating to the institutions and organization of the Reform movement will be investigated. The Jewish Exponent regularly detailed the conservative attitude of the Jewish community as it related to issues of the Reform movement. An examination of specific articles which relate to the Conservative and Reform movements will provide evidence for the importance that this newspaper now has for historians interested in comparing the two Jewish groups.

The Exponent also dedicated much of its space to reporting the events and goings-on of local area charity organizations and aid societies. Between the years 1887 and 1899, the years covered by this thesis, the newspaper reported on the development and events of such organizations as the Jewish Foster Home and Orphan Asylum, the United Hebrew Charities, the Hebrew Sunday School Society, the Female Hebrew Benevolent Society, the Young Men's Hebrew Association, various sewing and literary circles as well as the B'nai Brith and similar fraternal organizations. Every week the pages were filled with news of recent elections or the collection and distribution of charitable donations. Also, as warranted, news of growing organizations and relocation to new facilities was noted.

During the period 1887 to 1899, the city of Philadelphia was the stage for tremendous growth and change in the metamorphosis of American Judaism. Houses of worship were increasing in number and in size. New ministers were being hired to tend to the religious and spiritual needs of the congregations. New prayerbooks were being considered for everyday use.

Much of what has become our modern American Judaism was taking shape during these twelve years. Of course, the decades leading up to this period saw great changes and great leaders as well. Through the brilliance, vision and influence of such pioneers as Isaac Leeser (1806-1868), Hyman Gratz (1776-1857), Abraham Hart (1810-1885), Sabato Morais (1823-1897), William B. Hackenburg (1837-1918), Moses Aaron Dropsie (1821-1905), Mayer Sulzberger (1843-1923), Cyrus Adler (1863-1940) and Solomon Solis-Cohen (1857-1948) great changes swept through the Jewish community;[15] changes which would lead to more structured religious organization in America at a time when it was so greatly needed. While not all of these men lived to see the first issue of the Jewish Exponent, all of them helped influence those who would later be directly involved with its success.

With regard to the political situation, there were numerous issues with which the Exponent was deeply concerned. In particular, issues related to immigration quotas, the Dreyfus Affair, sweatshop regulations, Sunday Laws and general sentiments of anti-Semitism in Philadelphia and the greater United States were of great concern and were regularly debated in this newspaper.

The first several issues of the Jewish Exponent made it clear there were other areas of concern in Philadelphia deserving of attention. Nearly every week the pages of the paper contained updates of the activities of dozens of local organizations or chapters of national organizations. Included among those which appeared most frequently were the International Order of B'nai Brith (IOBB), the Young Men's Hebrew Association (YMHA), news of various Jewish literary societies and charities and goings-on at the local synagogues.

Published every Friday and mailed to its subscribers for the modest annual fee of $3.00, the Jewish Exponent was devoted primarily to, and targeted, the interests of those Jews who had been settled in the United States at least one or two generations. Currently under the auspices of the Jewish Federation of Greater Philadelphia, the Jewish Exponent is still published weekly and made available on the World Wide Web.[16] It continues to serve as an advocate for the Jewish community.

From its inception, the Jewish Exponent had no shortage of material about which to write. While focusing primarily on news and information pertaining specifically to Jewish life in Philadelphia, the Jewish Exponent also reserved a significant portion of its space to news from around the region and around the globe. Regular correspondence was printed from New York, Baltimore, Washington and Richmond giving readers a sense of the goings-on of neighboring Jewish communities. However, in an effort to continually educate its readers in world affairs, international news of interest to the American Jewish community was also printed.

While the Jewish Exponent was created by members of a highly intelligent elite, its pages were intended to serve the entire Americanized Jewish community. Among this elite were such figures as Mayer Sulzberger, Sabato and Henry Morais, Joseph Krauskopf, David Werner Amram, Cyrus Adler, Horace Stern, Simon Wolf, Oscar Straus, Solomon Schechter and Benjamin L. Gordin.[17]

The Jewish Exponent received and printed numerous articles and letters focusing on a very wide range of Judaically-oriented topics. Included among them were articles written about general concerns facing the Jewish community in Philadelphia such as synagogue affiliation and the value ascribed to Jewish customs.[18]

The sermons and editorials written for the Exponent frequently concerned the apathy of the Jewish community with regard to synagogue attendance and worship. The rabbis of Philadelphia were often greatly distressed over the lack of religious participation within the ranks of the Jewish community. In its first several issues, the Jewish Exponent printed articles with such titles as, "The Value of Customs"[19] and, "Jew and American."[20] In the former, written and signed by "X" (possibly a pseudonym for Mayer Sulzberger), the author focused his remarks on the young Jews living in America. It was the opinion of the author that the customs inherent to Jewish tradition should serve only to strengthen Judaism in America, lest Judaism lose its beauty and meaning. The author used his column to encourage his readers to "use their efforts [towards improving Judaism in America] honestly" and to continue to "build" and "promote unity of feeling and of thought" among all Jews for the purpose of creating a "national Church [having] conscious principles and steady purposes."[21]

This article was written as a response to an address delivered by Hon. Simon Wolf in St. Louis. In his address, of which there is only mention in the Exponent, Hon. Wolf apparently alluded to a question which often sparks controversy even in our current debates: Are we Jewish-Americans or [21] Ibid, 1:1 (April 15, 1887), p. 3.

American-Jews? Wolf boldly declared that Jews should be Americans first, Jews second.[22]

The editors offered their response to Hon. Wolf's address. It was their clear opinion that one's obligation is first to be a good Jew, as mandated by God. They maintained that while one might be considered a good American citizen, that does not necessarily mean that a person is also a good Jew.[23] They continued, saying that the "noblest type of Judaism is synonymous with the highest expression of American citizenship; that we can, in truth, say, 'be a Jew, not in name or birth only, but in word and deed ...'"[24]

Exponent coverage reveals that the rabbis tried moving the times and days of the worship services, occasionally tried different kinds of prayerbooks and even debated whether to shut down synagogue activity during the summer months. More than 100 years after these concerns were initially printed in this newspaper, the Jewish community faces these same issues as they approach the twenty-first century.

Arguments with themes such as these appeared regularly in the pages of the Jewish Exponent. In almost every issue a correspondent or an editor would argue some case such as the one presented above. In almost every instance the issue raised was one with which we can today still solidly identify. In the fourth issue, published May 6, 1887, there appeared an article written by Solomon Solis-Cohen titled, "Jewish Super-Sensitiveness."[25] The argument presented by Dr. Solis-Cohen is that Jews of the latter nineteenth-century were "entirely too thin-skinned." He argued that too many Jews walked the streets waiting to catch someone using the word "Jew" in a derogatory fashion -- living their lives seeking out opportunities to protest what they believed to be insulting remarks.[26]

[23] Ibid.

Today, even in the latter portion of the twentieth century, we find individuals among us who follow this same path. In fact, much of what was printed in the pages of the Jewish Exponent throughout its first twelve and a half years (1887-1899) offers much that still resonates with many Jews today. As one reads the articles and the topics which the rabbis and other speakers chose to relay through the pages of the Jewish Exponent at the turn of the century, it is easy to forget that these issues were not recorded as issues of our own day, but rather that they were the concerns of a generation three times removed from our own.

[25] Ibid. 1:4 (May 6, 1887), p. 4.
[26] Ibid.

On May 13, 1887, there appeared an article titled, "Congregational Worship." Submitted by the editors of the Jewish Exponent, its words are chilling. They could have been written in May, 1987, and might possibly appear again a century hence. Its haunting message is reborn every year and preached from numerous pulpits around the country. The editors wrote the following:

> To make our synagogues and temples Houses of Worship, let those who visit them join in the prayers. Let not the choir-loft be the only place where the swelling anthem of praise shall resound, but let the congregation, by participating therein, make the services their own; a real symphony that shall be a true expression of their actual thoughts and heartfelt emotions.[27]

It is so often the case, even today, that we allow the voices of a few individuals to pray for us, on our behalf, allowing us to pray vicariously through them.

While the pages of the Jewish Exponent were filled with articles like those described above, others appeared which detailed the particulars of the goings-on of the local congregations. The local rabbis and synagogues were given their due place among its pages. Sermon topics were listed along with general outlines of the remarks made from the pulpit. In these sermon descriptions, the editors also often noted the language in which the sermon was preached.

The first issue of the Jewish Exponent appeared in print on the last day of the celebration of Passover.[28] Page nine of that first issue was solely reserved for descriptions of sermons preached by many of the prominent rabbis. Among them were sermons preached by Rev. Dr. Samuel Hirsch, Rev. Sabato Morais, Rev. Dr. M. Jastrow, Rev. Elias Eppstein of Adath Jeshurun, Rev. Victor Caro and Rev. Leo Reich. In keeping with the story of Passover, it appears as though the primary themes for most of these sermons were freedom and liberation.

These were important messages for the Jewish community to hear in 1887. As mentioned earlier, these years were witness to tremendous changes in American Judaism. As a community, the Jews of the last years of the century were finally coming into their own; succeeding in business ventures, in politics and in wider social circles than ever before. The issues of freedom and liberation spoke directly to the hearts of all who came to listen. Abstracts of these and other sermons were regularly printed in the Exponent helping to spread the messages of the rabbis.

The community, too, was developing quickly. As indicated by the articles in the Jewish Exponent, Jews were involving themselves in numerous areas within the community. Primarily in the areas of immigration and social welfare the Jews of Philadelphia rallied to make the lives of all Jews at least tolerable.

In 1887, when the Jewish Exponent first went to press, some of the significant issues weighing on the minds of its contributors and editors included the growing immigrant population, organizations to aid those in need, and the growing popularity of religious reforms. The paper regularly offered facts and commentary regarding issues of immigration to the port of Philadelphia. Chief among these issues was what to do with the new Jewish immigrants as they arrived at these shores, and the potential drain they were having on the general economy, as well as the religious "baggage" brought with them from Europe. Locally, there were housing and employment concerns. Nationally, there was concern regarding how the United States government was reacting to the increased level of immigration during these years.

Statistics for Jewish immigration through the Port of Philadelphia were accurately maintained through the efforts of the Association of Jewish Immigrants.[29] According to a report made by Agent Moses Klein, on behalf of the Association, the immigration figures for June, 1887, was 257. With regard to the reasons behind Jews looking to come to America, the article maintains that it was the result of a "steady and continuous outpouring from persecuted lands to the land of liberty and prosperity."[30]

The article indicates that 99 of these immigrants held a trade and enumerated those skills which the immigrants were trained to accomplish. These skills assisted the Association in relocating the immigrants and integrating them into other communities. However, while many of these immigrants were resettled in various other cities and were able to tend to their own needs, it was recorded that money and other material aid was given by the Association to 128 of the immigrants during the month of June, alone.[31] The average annual expenses for the Association during these years was approximately $1,400.[32]

Occasionally, in the earlier years of the publication of the Jewish Exponent, there appeared supplement sections along with its regular issues. These supplements usually ran several pages and contained information or news about larger issues or projects that would exceed the paper's regular eight or nine page issue. In later years, entire issues were dedicated to events, people or organizations, increasing the total pages from the usual seven or eight to twelve or fourteen, eliminating the special section entirely. In one such supplement, which accompanied the July 15, 1887 issue, the lead editorial was titled: "Union of American Hebrew Congregations."[33] The supplement described the events of the tenth convention of the UAHC in tremendous detail over two full pages, three columns on each, with sketches of some of the more prominent men in attendance. This chronicle of the two-day event which took place in Concordia Hall, in Allegheny City, listed representatives of local congregations along with the numerous themes on the agenda. Included among these were the needs of the Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati. Apart from the all-to-familiar plea for financial support was the call for "heart and soul" as well. At that time, it was reported that the College had enrolled 33 students and was in need of $500,000.[34]

Appearing in the next several issues of the Jewish Exponent were editorials and letters from concerned conservative Jewish readers regarding the article about the UAHC convention and about the Reform movement in general. As the Jewish Exponent was primarily an advocate for the traditional Jewish community, it sought to publish these articles en masse. In both the July 22 and July 29, 1887, issues, there appeared rebuttal articles (included among them one from Solomon Solis-Cohen) which seemed to try desperately to find something positive for the Jewish community at large which resulted from the conference. While they were able to find some issues which they felt were of benefit to the more traditional Jewish community, the consensus was an overwhelming disappointment in the UAHC for over-promoting the Hebrew Union College and the reforms for which it stood. This was an especially potent issue for the Jewish community of Philadelphia at this time. There were significant numbers of Jewish leaders who opposed the Reform movement and who, one year after the Pittsburgh Conference in 1885, left the Reform union and established the Jewish Theological Seminary Association.[35] It was at this time that Conservative Judaism was beginning to formally organize as a separate religious denomination in the United States. In 1887, the Jewish Theological Seminary was formed.

The Jewish Exponent pledged, as part of its mission, to report on the organizations and associations which benefited the Jewish community.

Regularly, the paper included short announcements about various events taking place either locally or within nearby cities to which Jews of Philadelphia might attend. Among these were the goings-on of the B'nai Brith, various literary societies, a number of women's auxiliaries, the YMHA, the Jewish Foster Home and Orphan Asylum, the United Hebrew Charities, many of the local Hebrew Sunday schools and other organizations which seemed to come and go through the years. Each had its impact on the Jewish community and it became the self-imposed responsibility of the Jewish Exponent to report on them and inform its readers about them.

From its inception, the Jewish Exponent had an obvious impact both on the Jewish community of Philadelphia as well as on the surrounding communities. The American Israelite, of Cincinnati, said that the Exponent was certainly deserving of success after it received and reviewed its initial printing. The American Hebrew, out of New York City, claimed, "the contents manifest editorial skill, tact, and enterprise, in securing an unusually brilliant array of contributors."[36]

In a letter, written by Dr. Solomon Solis-Cohen, the radical Reform movement in America was declared doomed. It was his opinion that the movement would not last even a century.[37] More than one hundred years hence we see that his prediction was, fortunately, incorrect.

In chapter two of this thesis, closer examination will be paid to the evolving Reform Jewish community in America. How it was perceived by the Conservative Jewish community as depicted in specific articles appearing in the Jewish Exponent throughout its first twelve and a half years of publication will also be explored. Attention will be given to the various meetings convened by the UAHC and CCAR as well as to arguments and counter-arguments opposing the decisions made regarding further reforms to Judaism in America.

Chapter three will concentrate on the issue of immigration to America during this same period. In the analysis, evidence will be presented which suggests that not all Americans welcomed the new arrivals. Additionally, we will see how the Jewish Exponent used its influence to rally the Jewish community in support of those newcomers who needed assistance in settling in America, generally, and in Philadelphia, specifically. We will explore the work of the Jewish Immigrant Aid Society as well as other charity organizations specifically designed to assist these new American Jews in all aspects of their relocation. Government-imposed road blocks will also be discussed along with the attempts made by the Jewish community to reverse unfair legislation restricting both religious and economic freedoms.

In both of these chapters, the primary source material is the Jewish Exponent itself.

Many researchers and historians find the articles contained in the Jewish Exponent to be of great value in examining the Philadelphia Jewish community of the late nineteenth century. Hindering their research, however, no index of these early years of the newspaper previously existed, thus making searches through the paper a long and tedious process. As the primary undertaking of this thesis project, I have, during the past two years, painstakingly reviewed every article contained on the pages of the Exponent (1887-1899). Exceptions to this include volumes 15-16 and 27-28 which were missing from the available microfilm archives. Also, there appears to have been a shift in the numbering system employed by the newspaper. Following what should have been volume 16, as noted by the microfilm photographer, the numbering begins with volume 21. No explanation for this anomaly could be found. In terms of chronological dating, the only issues missing are those from April 1, 1894 to May 1, 1895 and April 1, 1898 to April 21, 1899.

In indexing the articles, I was primarily interested in those which pertained directly to the Jewish community of Philadelphia. All articles which reported both the religious and secular life of the community were recorded in the database research. Additionally, news from nearby cities (including Baltimore and New York) which spoke of related issues were included. I intentionally did not include those articles which were largely concerned with international affairs, or affairs not directly effecting Philadelphia. Reports of other localities such as Cincinnati (except with reference to the Reform Movement), Richmond and New Orleans were excluded, as were notices, reviews and advertising. Additionally, people, organizations and events which only appeared once were not included in this study, unless they were directly relevent to understanding the Philadelphia Jewish community.

After careful review of every article chosen for inclusion, I entered pertinent information into a database search engine which I created using Microsoft Access for Windows95. Every news article, commentary, letter and editorial printed during these years has been read and those pertinent to this study were entered into the database using the following fields: Date of issue, volume, number, type of article, author (if known), title or heading and keyword(s). Each entry has also been assigned a unique identification number to assist in sorting and analysis. In total, there are 1,970 entries in the database, all of which may be searched using data from any one field or combination of fields. Additionally, multiple data may be used to limit each search attempt. Using this database other researchers will have the opportunity to find areas of particular interest to their study.

For example, in preparing chapter 3 of this thesis (Immigration Issues), I was able, using the database, to locate every article which referred to "immigrants" or "immigration" in the keyword section. Additionally, the database further allowed me to narrow my search results by selecting only editorials or city news items. This database also allows a user to further reduce a search by indicating a specific author to find in addition to a keyword. For example, I would be able to find any "correspondence" written by "Mr. Louis E. Levy, Esq.," in which he discussed issues of "immigration" during "1893." Additionally, one could compare all of the above data with the same information found in any other year, or specific month. The search capabilities of this database are limited only by the finite amount of data contained in it. The user is free to select that criteria which they feel best identifies their own needs. For a sample of the kind of search routines one might run using this database, see the various appendices which conclude this thesis.

Throughout these early years of the Jewish Exponent, both immigration concerns and practical religious issues regularly appeared in the paper. Whether they were in editorials, news briefs, correspondence or sermons these two issues seemed always to present a source for discussion or argument. For this reason, I chose these two subjects to show how useful the database can be as a research tool. By applying the various search methods described above, I was able to track the issues by article type and by attribution throughout the twelve year period. Additionally, by examining the "keyword" field of each issue where these subjects were contained, I was able to see what other issues were of concern as well. In this way, the issues of immigration and Reform Judaism were not viewed in a vacuum, but rather in their relation to the general goings-on of the community.

The information contained in this database, however, is considered to be only a tool for assisting researchers in locating information contained in the Jewish Exponent. Its primary purpose is to assist in locating articles only and not to substitute for reading the paper itself.

The database is contained on a 1.4MB 3-1/2" diskette which is included with this presentation, along with a complete printed copy of the database index. As mentioned above, special appendices are also included which relate specifically to the material discussed in chapters two and three, on the Reform Movement in America and immigration, respectively. Further, there is included in the pages preceding the printed copy of the database, complete and detailed instructions for utilizing the computerized database along with relevant information for successfully completing a variety of informational searches.[38] It is my intention, as time permits, to continue working on this database project. At present, this database is believed to be the only existing index of the Jewish Exponent newspaper. The author understands that to be truly useful as a research tool, the database must include all issues of the paper's publication. As more work is completed to this end, updated information will be available at the American Jewish Archives, located at the Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati.

[38] The database was created and maintained using Microsoft® Access© for Windows©95. It may be possible to import this information into other advanced database formats. Additionally, the raw data may be easily exported into a spreadsheet format like Microsoft® Excel© for Windows©95.

Chapter 2: Reform Judaism

A. An Introduction to the Issues

According to Jacob Rader Marcus, there is no true chronology for the ideological development of the Reform Movement in America.[1] As early as 1818 religious change was already on the minds of some American Jews.[2] In 1824, the Charleston Reformed Society of Israelites broke away from traditional Orthodoxy in an attempt to fit in with the Christian world which surrounded it. Many reforms in religious practice were implemented slowly and, in some cases merely by happenstance. Two sources for this information are Response to Modernity,[3] by Michael Meyer, and United States Jewry, 1776-1985,[4] a series written by Jacob Rader Marcus.

It is important to explore some of the more significant events in the initial development of Reform Judaism in America. In this way, one may gain a clearer understanding of some of the factors affecting the Jewish community of Philadelphia during the period covered by this thesis. In 1846, at the age of 27, Isaac Mayer Wise left his home in Pilsen and came to America. Shortly following his arrival, Wise began his American rabbinical career serving as the rabbi of Beth El in Albany, New York. It was also at this time that Wise's leadership and organization of Reform Judaism in America began to take shape. In 1850, after approximately four years at Beth El, the congregation fired Wise over significant differences of opinion with regard to religious practice and ritual observance. In this same year, a faction splintered from Beth El and formed the new Reform congregation, Anshe Emeth, where Wise occupied the pulpit until 1854.[5] Leaving this new congregation, Wise came to Cincinnati where he became the rabbi at B'nai Jeshurun. Throughout his life Wise "spelled out his hopes for American Jewry in great detail." He called for "a union of congregations, a seminary to train American rabbis, a good ministry, a rabbinical association, national institutions to provide for the poor, a common prayer book, a Jewish press and publication society, hospitals, orphan asylums, Jewish elementary religious schools, books and tracts."[6]

In 1875, the Union of American Hebrew Congregations founded the Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati, Ohio, which opened under the leadership of Isaac Mayer Wise. This seminary, established for the purpose of training American rabbis, initially attracted support from staunch religious traditionalists like Philadelphia's Sabato Morais. Morais was, actually, very interested in the College. So dedicated was he to it, that in 1877 and 1878 he went to Cincinnati to serve on the board of examiners for the school. Morais was so pleased with the results of the testing that in his 1877 report to the Council of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations he proclaimed, "The College at Cincinnati may unequivocably be pronounced an object deserving of the support of all Israelites."[7] His support waned over the following few years as it became evident through various resolutions implemented by the Union that the Hebrew Union College was positioning itself as the scholastic center of Reform Judaism. Morais realized that the College would train its students to become rabbis in the Reform Movement. His hopes of using the support of the College and the Union to establish his own traditional seminary in Philadelphia would not come to fruition. For Morais and the rest of the traditional Jewish community frustration eventually led to action and resolve. Morais realized that since the Hebrew Union College was not to serve as a nondenominational institution, as Wise had at one time promised, then a seminary for the traditional community would have to be established.

In 1886, Dr. Morais's plans for a new traditional seminary began to take shape. Although the term "Conservative Judaism" was not generally in use at this time, it was the traditional philosophy of those who would eventually become associated with the fledgling movement that helped Morais achieve his goal. With the help of such ardent supporters as Dr. Solomon Solis-Cohen and Cyrus Adler, both of Philadelphia, the "Jewish Theological Seminary of New York," as the group called the new school, was founded on January 31, 1886.[8] One year later, on January 2, 1887, only three months before the Jewish Exponent first went to press, the Seminary accepted its first eight students.

The Jewish Theological Seminary's ties to the Jewish community of Philadelphia always remained strong. Even after Morais's death in 1897, Solomon Solis-Cohen and Cyrus Adler continued their active role in Seminary affairs, with Adler being named the chief "Executive Officer."[9] Philadelphia judge Mayer Sulzberger, became very active as well. His many contributions to the Seminary included a rich collection of Hebraica.

With the help of some fairly influential individuals and institutions, the Reform Movement in America continued to develop throughout the latter half of the nineteenth century. Most of the significant changes and adaptations which would become commonplace within this new movement were established years before the initial edition of the Jewish Exponent was published. However, by the time it did finally go to press on April 15, 1887, the Exponent was prepared to publish editorials and commentary focused on the religious reforms which pervaded nearly every aspect of Jewish America.

B. A Brief Review of Methodology

In total, the Jewish Exponent published 128 articles, during its first twelve and a half years (1887-1899) of issues which are extant, which related in some way to the issue of Reform Judaism either in Philadelphia, specifically, or nationwide. The majority of these articles were either editorials (75), correspondence (25) or city news clips (22). The articles which will be presented in the following section were found by searching the database using the keyword "reform" in the "keyword" field. In preparing the database I included the keyword "reform" with every entry that mentioned Reform theology, institutions or organizations, thus making a complete search for all such entries more efficient. This initial search retrieved the entire set of 128 article entries. From the results of this search, I then narrowed the search criteria further, searching for articles which contained the keywords "HUC," "UAHC," or "CCAR," common abbreviations for the three Reform institutions: Hebrew Union College, Union of American Hebrew Congregations and Central Conference of American Rabbis. Running these searches, the database returned 56, 33 and 30 articles, respectively. There were 122 articles printed which specifically mentioned at least one of the three institutions of the Reform Movement. Six articles were written about the Reform Movement which did not mention any of the institutions. Curiously, a search for "Jewish Theological Seminary," more conveniently coded with the abbreviation, "JTS," returned only 77 articles. It is the original 128 articles mentioned above, with which this chapter is primarily concerned.

C. A Review of Specific Articles

The goal of this chapter is to show the utility of the database in effectively researching a subject such as Reform Judaism. Of course, not all of the 128 articles related to Reform Judaism can be discussed in this brief chapter. Nonetheless, an examination of the general trends presented in articles published by the Jewish Exponent between 1887 and 1899 illustrates how the developing trends and sentiments of the Reform Movement affected the people and the city of Philadelphia at that time.

As early as the Jewish Exponent's second issue, the Reform Movement was included for discussion.[10] On its editorial page, a very brief article detailed financial contributions donated to both the Hebrew Union College and the Union of American Hebrew Congregations. According to the article, the UAHC received nearly $2,000 in dues from its Cincinnati members and HUC received $500 from a private donor in Kansas. While this article did not offer any insight, bias or conjecture regarding the donations or the institutions to which they were made, it does serve to inform the historian that the editors of the newspaper (or its readers) were interested in the support that these Reform institutions were receiving. Likewise, an article appearing on July 8, 1887 tells us, simply, that the secretary of the College, Mr. Jacob Ezekiel, had celebrated his seventy-fifth birthday.[11] This, again, does not provide any significant information for understanding community attitudes, other than indicating that HUC was in fact recognized as a central institution of American Judaism. It was apparent, through articles such as these, that the goings-on of the College were of interest to Jewish communities at least as far away as Philadelphia.

Occasionally, the Jewish Exponent published, in addition to its regular weekly issue, a supplementary section. In such cases, there was generally a noteworthy event which the editors felt would best be reported in a section devoted entirely to it. In the case of the supplement published along with the July 15, 1887, issue, the editors wrote a two page exposition about the Union of American Hebrew Congregations' tenth annual convention held in Allegheny City.[12] The detailed report indicated who was present, who led various sessions, the specific goings-on of the two-day event and the resolutions voted upon by its constituents. It was this supplement which sparked a long series of editorial commentary and correspondence offering harsh criticism of the Union and of the Reform Movement.

The main editorial commentary published one week following the supplement concerned the UAHC convention in Pittsburgh (Allegheny City).[13] In the article, the editor stressed that the meetings "did not introduce any new important factor calculated to materially benefit or advance the cause of Judaism or of the Jews in this country." They felt that those responsible for the convention had been careful not to raise issues which might cause conflict within itself or offer a point of attack to the outside world. The editors maintained that this was probably to the Union's credit. Additionally, the editors were pleased that the Union recognized the need for a Sabbath School Union. However, with all this, the editors of the Exponent firmly believed that the Union failed to present a number of important concerns, hence committing a "sin of omission." Primarily, they felt the members of the Union failed to recognize the importance of the solidarity of Israel (as a people), the increasing outrage at the oppression of Jews in Russia and Roumania, and the concerns facing the nation with regard to immigration.

[12] Ibid, 1:14 (July 15, 1887), Supplement.
[13] Ibid, 1:15 (July 22, 1887), p. 6.

It was also with this article, that the editors firmly asserted their opposition to the UAHC and the Hebrew Union College as Reform institutions. The editors wrote: "The Union may still contain a number of conservative congregations, but as a body its tendency is towards radical reform. This fact may be strenuously denied, but is nevertheless positively established. Its leaders are radical reformers of the school of Western American Reform Judaism. If there be conservative elements still within its midst, they are allowed but little influence in the government of the College."

The editors concluded their statement that the reforming attitude taken by the Union with respect to the College hindered efforts to bridge gaps in the American Jewish community. They maintained that such a stance had "estranged many who would have otherwise gladly lent their strength and influence to build up a Union which in its breadth and scope would have included all interests..."

On July 29, 1887, the Jewish Exponent published a letter written by Dr. Solomon Solis-Cohen in which he condemned the actions of the "radical reform."[14] Aside from his contention that this new union would fail in less than a century's time, he mostly was offended by their desire to remain connected with mainstream traditional Judaism. To Solis-Cohen, this group held nothing in common with Judaism. He believed that "no amount of special pleading" could make it Judaism. He continued, observing, "It is no more Judaism than the worship of the golden calf was Mosaism..." In his conclusion, Dr. Solis-Cohen suggested that the members of this new movement proclaim their views boldly on their own merits – not on the merits of Judaism. He never declared that the new religion should cease to exist or that it did not have the right to exist. Rather, he advocated calling the new religion by another name, so that it would not be equated with the teachings and belief system of traditional Judaism.

After many weeks of calm and quiet regarding this heated issue of radical reform, a letter appeared two months later in the Exponent, on September 23, 1887, which stirred emotions again.[15] Signed only with the pseudonym, "I Seek," the author of the correspondence equated the struggles ensuing between Orthodoxy and Reform with the image of "two generals engaged in battle." It was the author's contention that neither side could win this war alone, but rather Judaism could win if the two sides would come together in understanding, forging a greater peace, and a stronger Judaism.

Aside from these early concerns, expressed with such verve, most of the remaining articles leading up to the twentieth century were relatively tame. Primarily, the articles were general news items which reported the activities of the congregations. They included news of rabbis hired by various local synagogues, guest lecturers or invitations of distant congregations wishing to have local rabbis speak to their worshippers.

After reviewing the database entries, and viewing selected articles, it became clear that the Jewish Exponent was able to maintain a fairly unbiased position with regard to its characterization of the Reform Movement. Of course there appeared editorials and commentary which severely chastised those affiliated with the Movement, but these articles came from a select few traditionalists. Even though some of these articles were, in fact, written by members of the Exponent staff, the paper was able to maintain a comfortable balance by frequently printing very positive and encouraging news of the various institutions and synagogues of the Reform Movement. Additionally, rebuttal articles by those affiliated with the Reform Movement, or unaffiliated supporters of the Movement were printed in equal measure.

On July 17, 1891, an editorial appeared honoring the graduates of the Hebrew Union College as being men of great learning and scholarship.[16] In the article, "Good Men as Rabbis," the editors indicated that there were some individuals who did not agree with the ideology of the College. However, the majority of the article highlighted the educational capacity of the institution. In December of the same year, the editors printed an article which gave suggestions as to how the Reform Movement could improve its status in the eyes of the more traditional Jewish community opposed to it.[17] A small editorial comment appeared in September, 1896, which spoke of the Hebrew Union College's "Semitic Scholarship."[18] In the one paragraph editorial, the writer expressed regard for the College's special courses in Semitic studies. The author described the course as calling for "fluency in reading and translating Hebrew, and a knowledge of Hebrew and Arabic grammar." The editor further stated that the Hebrew Union College should no longer serve as the object of derision by its opponents since the standards for admission to this program, and the quality of the program itself, were quite high.

At various times throughout the period, the Exponent published articles which told of the events of the various Reform institutions. Annually, there appeared reports of the ordination exercises from the Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati. Sporadically, there would appear articles related to improvements or elections within the Union. While there were many rabbis of all denominations who regularly authored articles for the Jewish Exponent, on only two occasions were sermons related specifically to the Reform Movement printed in this newspaper during the period covered in this thesis. The first was a Friday evening sermon delivered on October 19, 1888 by Rabbi Henry Iliowizi, nearly two months after he was officially installed as the rabbi of Adath Jeshurun, a congregation sympathetic to Reform.[19] In the sermon, titled "Reform: The True and the False," Rabbi Iliowizi defines the term 'reform' stating that it "always implies change for the better, higher, nobler, and a consciousness that matters have once been better than they are now." After a lengthy discourse, Iliowizi concluded his remarks stating that "if Judaism be a living influence, a vital power, it necessarily subsists by the constant process of reform." Further, he added that "without reforming to satisfy the demands of the times, Judaism could not live; it lives because it is reforming, and it is reforming in order to live." In examining the articles which appeared in the Exponent several weeks prior to Rabbi Iliowizi's sermon, there did not appear to be any significant event which would have sparked either the sermon, itself, or its publication.

The other sermon, printed on April 28, 1893, was attributed to Rev. J. Leonard Levy. This sermon was delivered at his inauguration as Associate Rabbi of the Reform congregation, Keneseth Israel, on April 22, 1893.[20] This sermon primarily served as his introduction to the congregation. In it, he defined his rabbinate as an "imitation of the prophets of old." It was in them that he searched for his strength and his wisdom.

Rabbis whose writing about Reform Judaism appeared most frequently in the Jewish Exponent between 1887 and 1899 included Henry Berkowitz (Reform) (12), Joseph Krauskopf (Reform) (38) of Keneseth Israel (1887-1923), Henry Iliowizi (traditional) (38) of Adath Jeshurun and Marcus Jastrow (traditional) (26), Rabbi-emeritus of Rodef Shalom (1866-1892).[21] There were many other rabbis whose opinions were published by the Exponent during this time and about this subject, but the four listed above were, by far, the most prolific. It is important to note that the Exponent did make space available to both liberal and traditional rabbis to present their opinions on a regular basis. The four rabbis listed above authored 114 articles alone which dealt with Reform Judaism during these years.

In examining the articles written by Berkowitz, Krauskopf, Iliowizi and Jastrow, I found it is interesting to note the foci of their submissions. Rabbis Berkowitz and Krauskopf, both affiliated with the Reform Movement and members of the first class of the Hebrew Union College, devoted most of their writing to community relations and general social causes. With the exceptions of those times when they spoke or wrote about the Torah portion or specific Jewish milestones, they wrote about race relations, community-wide prejudices, marriage, charity obligations, the extended role of women in Jewish life, ethics concerns and interfaith relations.[22] The two more traditional rabbis in this survey, Rabbis Iliowizi (b. 1850 in Minsk, Russia) and Jastrow (b. 1829 in Posen), focused most of their attention on more religiously oriented subjects. Again, as with the two liberal rabbis, Iliowizi and Jastrow did write articles about the Torah portion or specific events, but aside from those occasions their focus turned to issues of religious observance and religious practice.[23] It would regularly be the case that the more traditional rabbis would print opinions or sermons about religious practice and issues of faith, and the more liberal rabbis would concern themselves with issues related to the people whom they served.

D. Statistics, Patterns and Analysis

Certainly, from the number of articles written about Reform Judaism which appeared in the Exponent, and the ideological bent of its major contributors, during the twelve and a half year period of this study, one would expect some significant critique of the Jewish community of Philadelphia.

[23] For examples, see Jewish Exponent (Jastrow) 4:13, p.5; 12:26, p.7; 22:24, p.1; (Iliowizi) 3:22, p.6; 22:2, p.7;26:4, p.2.

While there were 128 articles printed on the subject of Reform, it was curious to discover through examination of each article, that very few spoke to concrete issues. In most cases, the articles were merely informative; they stated facts about the institutions, accounted for donations or recapitulated fairly mundane activities of either the Hebrew Union College, the Union of American Hebrew Congregations or the Central Conference of American Rabbis.

The ability to define search criteria and utilize the database to accurately retrieve the requested information based on that criteria serves to promote the efficiency and value of the total project. As can be seen in Table 1, using the information culled from searching the database, it is possible to determine precisely how many articles of all types, related to Reform Judaism, were printed in each extant volume of the newspaper during the years covered in this thesis:

Volume	Dates	Quantity		Volume	Dates	Quantity

As can be easily seen from the table above, volume 24 did not include any articles related specifically to Reform Judaism. There were, however, articles written by Reform rabbis printed in this volume. In fact, Rabbi Krauskopf delivered two sermons which were printed on the front page of the Exponent in volume 24 (24:2 and 24:12). The first sermon was titled, "The Guard Neither Dies Nor Surrenders," and focused on faith in God.[24] The second, "The People Without a Country," focused on the Immigration Restriction Bill which had just passed the House and Senate by a large majority.[25]

In examining those volumes where significantly larger numbers of articles appeared which related specifically to Reform Judaism (as indicated by the chart above), these inflated numbers can be explained based on the events of the time periods in which they were published. For example, volume one contained numerous editorials and correspondence related to the early development and issues of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations and the Hebrew Union College. This was the first opportunity for public opinions to be expressed through this newspaper, and the editors took advantage of the opportunity to publish the opinions of its readers. The large number of articles related to this subject printed in volume nine primarily reflected editorial comment and public response to the UAHC convention held in Baltimore. The number of articles printed in volume 21 were primarily in response to the annual convention of the Central Conference of American Rabbis held in Rochester, NY, in July, 1895.

As can be seen below, in Table 2, it is possible to employ additional search routines, thus enabling users of the database to determine how frequently each type of article (i.e. editorial, news, etc) printed in each volume related to Reform Judaism:

To fully appreciate the benefit of the computerized database, one can examine Table 2, above, and find the database entries related to it in Appendix C following these chapters. In reviewing the entries available in the appendix, one can quickly evaluate the worth of a particular article as it might relate to one's own study. By examining the date an article appears, its author, title or keywords, a researcher will be able to determine more quickly the relevence of each article to their own particular study.

The general lack of polemics contained within the articles of the Jewish Exponent establishes the value of using it to explore the Jewish community of Philadelphia during the period covered in this thesis. As mentioned earlier in this chapter, the editors of the newspaper were able to maintain a fairly unbiased approach to their overall publication of articles related to the American Jewish community. This was much in contrast to other Jewish newspapers of this era, such as the American Israelite of Cincinnati, the Reform Advocate of Chicago and the American Hebrew of New York, all of which, to a certain extent, maintained a particular bias in their reporting. It does not appear that the editors of the Jewish Exponent had the intention of denigrating the Reform Movement. Generally, the editors of the Jewish Exponent did abstain from polemics in their editorials throughout the years considered in this thesis project. However, to examine this issue further it is recommended that the database be consulted and analyzed further according to the interests of the reader.

With few exceptions, most of which were discussed above, the information found in the "keyword" field of the database indicated that the articles presented in the Exponent were merely printed for the sake of disseminating news or information about the various branches of Judaism which were taking shape at this time. No newspaper could survive without offering some harsh opinions within its editorial section. The Jewish Exponent was certainly no exception to this. However, the editors of the newspaper were able to maintain a consistent balance when considering articles for publication. As has been described in this chapter, editorials and reader comment from varied religious perspectives were regularly included for publication. For additional insight regarding this or other issues it is strongly recommended that readers of this thesis consult the database index to examine those areas and issues which suit their particular curiosities.

Chapter 3: Immigration Issues

A. An Introduction to the Issues

Between 1870 and 1920, millions of Southern and Eastern Europeans left their native homes, setting sail for America. Joining the ranks of other ethnic groups, two million Jews fled poverty and pogroms in search of a more secure existence. They arrived in America penniless, but eager to settle in their new home.

In comparison with other cities which hosted immigrants, Philadelphia housed relatively few newcomers. Philadelphia, as only one of many possible American destinations, was not seen as a major center of immigration. The city did, however, offer significant opportunities to those who settled there. Jewish immigrants in Philadelphia entered the workforce, becoming productive citizens in their new community, as peddlers, merchants and shopkeepers. They resorted to unskilled labor only when absolutely necessary, and then only temporarily. Though for a time their lives were little improved as compared to their experience in the Pale, the population increased and the variety of occupations among them became more diverse.

This chapter, however, will primarily concern itself with Jewish immigration to Philadelphia between April, 1887, and December, 1899, the first years of the publication of the Jewish Exponent newspaper. The reports of public opinion, editorial commentary and sermonic expression are taken directly from the pages of the newspaper itself, except where specifically indicated.

Jewish immigration figures for the years just prior to 1887 showed a tremendous influx of newcomers to America. Beginning with the massive wave of Russian immigration in 1882, there were so many immigrants arriving that the societies in place at the time were ill-equipped to deal effectively with them. In 1884, an Association for the Protection of Jewish Immigrants was founded, aiding 1,076 individuals during the first year. The following year, 2,310 needed help and each year more and more required assistance. During the first thirteen months, in their efforts to assist newly arriving Jewish immigrants, the Association exhausted $1,805.82 of its budget.[1]

Some Exponent articles presented the issue of immigration from a national perspective. After all, the Jewish community of Philadelphia did not exist in a vacuum. The editors of the Exponent felt it was important – if the paper was to have any merit – to report on news of their "co-religionists" from around the country. (The term "co-religionist" was used frequently to refer to other Jews, either locally, nationally or abroad.) One review of the national perspective came from Dr. A. Friedenwald who spoke before the Hebrew Literary Society.[2] In his lecture at the Baltimore Young Men's Hebrew Association, he detailed the waves of immigration of both German and Russian Jews to America and how, after very few years of needing assistance, members of both immigrant groups were able to become productive members of society. (This article was published under the heading, "Baltimore City News," a feature regularly appearing in the pages of the Jewish Exponent.)

Of course, not all Jews who wanted to come to this country had yet done so. There were great numbers of Russian Jews who, for a multitude of reasons, had not yet left their homeland. On one occasion, reported in the pages of the Exponent, Mayer Sulzberger is quoted from a lecture he presented regarding the tragic conditions of the Jews remaining in Russia.[3] His concern was that the governments of both Russia and the United States were inappropriately misinforming the world community about the harsh conditions oppressing the Russian Jew.

[3] Ibid 6:3 (October 25, 1889), p. 6.

The Exponent played a significant role in reporting the state of immigration to Philadelphia as well as the impact which this newly arriving population had on the larger community. In this chapter I will examine specific articles which helped to paint a picture of what was happening during this period.

B. A Brief Review of Methodology

Of the Jewish Exponent issues I was able to research (see chapter 1, p.23, for exclusions) during the specified time period, 199 articles appeared which dealt, in some fashion, with the concerns of Jewish immigration. To further break down the distribution of attention paid to this issue, the following chart may prove helpful:

Article Type	# of Articles
City News	74
Correspondence	22
Editorials	99
Sermons	1
Supplements	3

Additionally, a further breakdown of the types of City News articles proves that while immigrants were arriving at the Port of Philadelphia, the issue was considered important enough to comment over one hundred miles away in Baltimore. There were a total of 74 City News articles related to Jewish immigration during the period. Of these, 59 were included under the heading, "Philadelphia City News," while 15 were contained in "Baltimore City News." Baltimore did have its own immigrant population, receiving its share either directly through its own port or through the resettlement of those immigrants arriving elsewhere. On rare occasions, the Exponent even had a reporter sent to Baltimore to cover steamship landings and the efforts of the various aid societies which met the immigrants upon arrival. While articles related to Baltimore's immigration are included in the database, for the purposes of this study only those articles which were directly concerned with Philadelphia's immigrant population are included in this chapter.

This chapter will not present every article which refers to immigration as it appeared in the newspaper. For a glance at the subject matter of these articles, the reader is encouraged to examine the various appendices at the conclusion of this thesis which list, in chronological order, each database entry related to immigration. This chapter, however, will describe a variety of immigration issues based on articles which appeared in the Exponent. Those of particular importance, based either on their author or particular message or concern will be referred to specifically so as to further elucidate the primary issues related to Jewish immigration.

C. A Review of Specific Articles and Chronology of Immigration to Philadelphia

Only one congregational sermon preached on the subject of Jewish immigration to America appeared in the Exponent. The sermon was delivered by Rev. Dr. Joseph Krauskopf at a Sunday service at Keneseth Israel Congregation and appeared on January 8, 1897.[4] In this sermon, Rabbi Krauskopf paid particular attention to the Immigration Restriction Bill passing through Congress. He began his sermon by indicating that the "Immigration Restriction Bill has passed the House and the Senate by a large majority. There is little doubt but that the President will approve it." Krauskopf blamed the politicians who framed the bill, saying firmly that their intention was to prohibit the Russian Jew, specifically, from entering this country.

Appearing only one month prior to the publication of Rabbi Krauskopf's sermon, a letter written by Louis E. Levy condemning various government policies was received and printed by the Jewish Exponent.[5] In this front-page letter, Mr. Levy expressed growing concerns that earlier bills passed by the United States government, as well as attitudes of foreign governments such as Russia, Germany and Poland, were limiting the number of Jews able to come to this country.

In all, the Jewish Exponent published 80 articles related specifically to the concerns of Russian immigration during the years covered in this thesis. Included in this number were editorials (44), correspondence (7) and news articles from both Philadelphia (9) and Baltimore (19). Additionally, there was one sermon, written by Rev. Dr. Henry Berkowitz, which focused mostly on the plight of Jews still living in Russia rather than Russian-Jewish immigrants in America.[6] Excluding the one sermon, only eight other articles related to the issues of the Russian immigrants were attributable to individuals other than the editors of the Exponent. Some of these were editorial commentary submitted by readers. Others were submitted by various correspondents. Most of the articles which were printed focused on growing concerns of Russian oppression toward Jews still living in that country. For example, an unattributed editorial appeared in December, 1890, which offered a fearful picture of the deteriorating condition of Russian Jewry.[7] Those articles which were attributed to a particular individual are listed below:

Of these eight articles, five of them were written by people who made no other contribution to the Exponent before 1900 and possibly never contributed again. Only Miss Szold (6), Mr. Levy (8) and Rabbi Berkowitz (12) made more frequent contributions to the newspaper.

In reviewing all of the articles which appeared during these years which related to the concerns of Russian immigration, there appeared to be no swell of attention paid to any one particular theme. There were, however, a number of themes which appeared with regular frequency. Most apparent was the negative opinion of the Russian immigrants by the German Jews now living in America (see 4:7, p.4; 9:21, p.4; 9:26, p.4). According to one article, though, it was the opinion of the author that many of the negative feelings expressed by the German-Jewish community were misguided and inappropriate. The author reminded German-Jewish Americans that they, too, were once looked down upon when they came to America.[8] Several articles appeared which described both the condition and the attitude of the Russian-Jewish immigrants in more positive ways. For example, one editorial tried very hard to express the great efforts made by the Russian Jews to get an education and to learn English in order to succeed and advance their standing in America.[9] In the article mentioned in the table above, written by Joseph Josephsen, a recent immigrant, the author tells the tale of his own experiences with learning English. Articles related to Russia's oppression of its Jews appeared frequently in both editorial commentary and correspondence throughout the years covered in this thesis, beginning with volume four (see 4:7, November 23, 1888, p.4).

There had long been concerns, even by Jews in the United States, that the influx of new immigrants would prove to be too great a strain for the economy. In 1887, representatives of the United Hebrew Charities sanctioned the repatriation of 1,698 immigrants because they were unemployable or sick.[10] This, however, did not mean that all Jewish immigrants were being turned away. In fact, the 1880s saw large-scale immigration waves from Eastern Europe to America. According to historian Robert Tabak, "the increase in Jewish population in Philadelphia – from an estimated 15,000 in 1880 to 70,000 in 1904 – changed not only the size but the norms of Jewish expression, including religious expression."[11] While only a minority had clear theological definitions of Judaism, the synagogues they went to, their way of eating, and their patterns of holiday and life-cycle observance, tied them to traditional Judaism. This increase in population did, indeed, put a strain on community resources. While various agencies in the early 1880s were anticipating the arrival of only 150 immigrants each month, the numbers far exceeded all expectations. Of course, this created the need for additional funds and people to facilitate the immigration process on these shores. While an immigrant and mutual aid society had been in existence since 1784, this organization was not prepared to assist in the relocation of the thousands of immigrants arriving at this fast pace.

Through the efforts of Moses Dropsie, Mayer Sulzberger, Louis E. Levy, Simon Muhr, Alfred T. Jones and other prominent Jews, a new and improved immigrant aid society was created. They created the Association of Jewish Immigrants of Philadelphia (formally organized in the fall of 1884) which attempted to assist immigrants from the moment they disembarked their ship to the time they were settled with food, clothing and shelter. In addition, the Association arranged for the proper collection of the baggage and the payment of necessary port taxes.

In an editorial printed on August 12, 1887 titled "Our Immigrants," the editors spoke to the direct benefit immigrants and the general Jewish community received from the work of the Association of Jewish Immigrants.[12] This article indicates the potentially disastrous nature of the mass of immigrants arriving at Philadelphia, stating that "while most come ready to work, all arrive poor and in need." However, the work of the Association, "has aided not only the immigrants themselves, but it has rolled away what would have become a reproach to the Jewish name." No less important, this editorial indicated how the Association went to great lengths to warn potential immigrants in their home countries "of the harsh conditions to which they [would] be compelled to subject themselves." The article, in essence, appears to be a warning to potential immigrants not to come to America with false hopes and expectations, and perhaps not to come to America at all. The Association was doing the best it could with the funds available to it, but it seems as though immigrants were arriving expecting more than the Association was able to give. All the efforts of the Association imposed heavy burdens on its financial stability. In an editorial plea published August 10, 1888, an appeal was made on behalf of the Association to raise funds to continue the work of the group.[13] On March 22, 1889, a stronger appeal was necessary. Louis Levy wrote an editorial to the whole of the Jewish community of Philadelphia stressing how the work of the Association seemed to be misunderstood.[14] Evidently the community believed that the Association's work was responsible for the increased multitude of immigrants, whereas the Association contended that their work only assisted those immigrants who arrived of their own volition. Regardless, the funds of this Association were rapidly being depleted and few donors were responding to the needs of the group. The article listed the names and addresses of sixteen members of the Association to whom donations could be sent. Among these were Simon Muhr, Henry Morais, Charles Hoffman, Philip Lewin and Joseph Krauskopf.

It was recognized very early in the printing of the Jewish Exponent that the new immigrants required other kinds of support in addition to the financial help already provided them by the Association. In an editorial printed on May 8, 1887, concern regarding the moral, social and mental progress of the immigrants was presented.[15] The editors, while not offering any immediate solutions, commended those individuals and organizations which had accepted responsibility for the welfare of the immigrants. At the same time, the editors recognized that commendation alone could not be the sole response to the needs of the immigrants. Rather, the Exponent also took it upon itself to serve as an effective forum, bringing the needs of the immigrants, and the societies in place to assist them, into the public eye.

One year later, on June 15, 1888, increased numbers of immigrants were reported in the "Philadelphia City News" section of the Exponent.[16] According to a report by the Association, 318 Jewish immigrants had landed at Philadelphia during the previous six weeks; an increase of 170 over those landing during the corresponding period of the previous year. The article cites specific examples of the degree of aid given to individuals of all ages as they arrived at the port. The Jewish Exponent tried very hard to cast the Association and the immigrants in a good light, indicating the good work of the group as well as how the new arrivals could benefit the general society.

On October 25, 1889, Mayer Sulzberger's lecture before the Philadelphia YMHA regarding the "Russian-Jewish Problem in America" was printed in the Jewish Exponent.[17] In his lecture, as reported by the newspaper, Mr. Sulzberger referred to the "downtown brethren" as a "lowly class of citizens" who were desperately in need of "cultivating, educating and improving." It was his opinion, as well, that the Association was not doing nearly enough – whether it was in their means or not – to provide such assistance to them. Further, he declared, "there was room for a new association" to complete the task.

The November 15, 1889 issue of the Jewish Exponent published the events of the annual meeting of the Association of Jewish Immigrants.[18] At this meeting both the annual report was made and elections were held. Additionally, reports of the past year's immigration statistics were reviewed. As it was reported in this article, 1,288 Jewish immigrants arrived at the port of Philadelphia from November 1, 1888 to November 1, 1889. Of those, 637 stayed in Philadelphia. By comparison, 87 headed for Baltimore and 296 for

New York. Of the total number of immigrants, 598 were engaged in some trade; 57 different occupations were represented, including 98 peddlers, 13 merchants and 3 shochetim. It was agreed by the members in attendance that the work of the Association during the past year was at least satisfactory. Of course, there were still financial concerns. For the next term, Mr. Louis E. Levy was elected president; Mr. Jacob Miller, vice-president; and Mr. Simon Muhr, secretary. Others elected to various positions included Mr. Charles Hoffman, Mr. Philip Lewin and Rabbi Joseph Krauskopf.

Problems associated with increased immigration figures were detailed in a City News article printed on July 18, 1890.[19] In this report, the Society of the United Hebrew Charities reported spending more money than ever before, due to the tremendous growth in applicants. Evidently, more indigent immigrants were either landing in Philadelphia or were being transported to Philadelphia from New York than had been expected. To further complicate the issue, the Association of Jewish Immigrants was also overburdened and unable to satisfy requests for aid. According to this article, Dr. Morris Jastrow, Jr., sent a letter to the board of the Charities in which he called attention to the increasing number of poor immigrants and asked that the matter be considered. Great concern developed regarding the lax attention paid to the immigration laws limiting the number of poor immigrants allowed to enter the U.S.. They were concerned that there were not enough limits on immigration. Such concerns were voiced repeatedly and reported often by the Exponent (see also: August 1, 1890 – 7:17, p. 6).

The following month, appearing in the August 1, 1890 issue of the Jewish Exponent, was an editorial which took a very different position on the immigration issue. In it, the editors asked the difficult question: How could we close the doors to downtrodden and oppressed Jewish immigrants, turning them away from this country? The editors suggested that the United States Jewish community, which was receiving nearly 30,000 new Jewish immigrants every year, was suddenly becoming overly selfish and prejudiced against a generally enthusiastic and promising community which had among it a few "paupers, knaves and fools." One year later, on August 14, 1891, the Exponent published the figures for immigration to Philadelphia for the previous month.[20] In the article, the Association of Jewish Immigrants reportedly assisted the largest number of immigrants in its history: 500 new Jewish men and women arrived at Philadelphia that month, alone.

An interesting turn of events occurred in April, 1899. According to a report published May 19, 1899, the figures for that April's immigration showed the smallest number of immigrants arriving in Philadelphia than in any other April since 1889 – 37, compared to 23 immigrants received ten years earlier.[21] By contrast, the largest number of immigrants reportedly came in April, 1891, when the port of Philadelphia processed 402 new Jewish arrivals. The report offers some explanation for the decline. Apparently rumors had spread that the steamship companies were preparing to lower their fares to America, thus creating less of an urgency for Jews to leave their native lands, in anticipation of the reduced rates. Unfortunately, an agreement maintained by the steamship companies never allowed for the reduction. This event did, however, allow for the various aid agencies to breath more comfortably and recoup from the previous months' steady wave of new arrivals.

To further emphasize the decline in Jewish immigration, an article appeared on October 20, 1899 presenting a comparison of the previous five months' numbers against the same period of the previous year.[22] The May-September, 1899 figures reported 850 Jewish aliens had arrived at

[21] Ibid, 29:5 (May 19, 1899), p.7.
[22] Ibid, 30:1 (October 20, 1899), p.8.

Philadelphia, while the same period the previous year had recorded 1,215. These numbers were also compared to the total population of immigrants who had arrived at Philadelphia during these two periods: 7,924 in 1899, compared to 6,087 in 1898.

Several weeks later, a report of the fifteenth annual meeting of the Association of Jewish Immigrants was presented.[23] In the report, prepared by the Association's president, Louis E. Levy, immigration statistics from November, 1898 through November, 1899, were detailed and illustrated. For that twelve-month period, a total of 1,649 Jewish immigrants were received – a decline of 430 from the previous twelve-month period. Of those who arrived during 1899, 319 were directly assisted by the Association. The others were either met by family or friends and needed no additional support or were sick and had to be returned to the native countries. This article also indicated that 1,264 of these immigrants came from Russia, 209 from Galicia, 85 from Roumania, 58 from Hungary, 20 from Germany, 7 from England, 3 from Bakovines and one from each of Sweden, France and Persia.

During the years covered in this thesis, Louis E. Levy wrote nine letters to the Jewish Exponent related to the Association of Jewish Immigrants, of which he was president, and the issues concerning immigration to Philadelphia. In his last letter submitted for publication on December 15, 1899, Mr. Levy addressed the issue of the decline in Jewish immigration to Philadelphia.[24] Levy blamed the decline on two factors: 1) steamship routes shifting to the east, and 2) a general shift in the overall trends of immigration. According to both the report by Levy, and an editorial which appeared in the same issue, no single event could explain the decline. Unfortunately, as was often the case working with this newspaper, these articles were copied to microfilm poorly and were nearly illegible. It was possible, however, to see that by the end of the century, the treasurer's report of the financial stability of the Association of Jewish Immigrants painted a particularly distressing picture. Due to increased demands placed on it and the decline of donations, the treasury had dropped to only $535.60. An urgent plea at the end of this article called for increased donations to support the organization's efforts.

[23] Ibid, 30:9 (December 15, 1899), p.2.

D. Statistics, Patterns and Analysis

Throughout the twelve and a half years covered in this thesis, the attention paid to the issues surrounding immigration concerns varied. This is not to say that the problems waxed or waned from one year to another, but immigration was not the only concern with which this newspaper was occupied. The issue of immigration may certainly have seemed more pressing at some times than at others. Likely, this would be the case in years when immigration figures showed a particularly large number of immigrants arriving at Philadelphia. Because of this, it is possible to assume that, just as editors control newspaper content today, the editors of the Jewish Exponent felt their limited space might better be used to publish articles related to other issues. As can be seen in Table 1, using the information culled from searching the database, it is possible to determine precisely how many articles of all types related to immigration during these years were printed in each volume of the newspaper:

Additionally, using the database, it is possible to more clearly illustrate how frequently each type of article (i.e. editorial, news, etc) in each volume related to immigration appeared. As can be seen in Table 2 below, there were some volumes (each volume constituted of, generally, 26 issues) which did not include articles of a particular type related to immigration issues. There were some volumes however, such as volume nine (1891), which included considerably more articles related to issues of immigration than others.

These statistics can be examined in a variety of ways, thus enabling a researcher to pinpoint data of particular relevance to their study. For example, using the database search utility, I was able to examine all correspondence entries related to immigration issues. Table 3, below, is a representation of the frequency of these occurrences. Using proper search field identifiers, one could easily compile a similar list based on the focus of their particular study.

Volume	Quantity		Volume	Quantity

By using the information from Table 3 above, one can quickly see that no single volume of the Exponent published significantly more correspondence articles than any other volume. It appears that the Exponent published its "Correspondence" articles much like modern newspapers print "Letters to the Editor." While the letters may appear in every edition of the paper, every letter may not be directly related to the same subject. So too, in the case of the "Correspondence" appearing in the Exponent, while most issues of the paper contained letters from readers, not all the letters were directly relevant to Philadelphia or, in this particular case, to immigration.

By narrowing my search as above, it is clear that no correspondence articles appeared in volumes other than those listed. In comparison with other article types, it is also easy to see that this was not the primary venue for discussing these issues. The "City News" and "Editorial" sections of the newspaper devoted far more attention to the issue of immigration than any other article type. This is easily explained, as these two sections were regular features of the Jewish Exponent, appearing in nearly every issue. All other article types (i.e., sermons, correspondence, etc.) appeared more sporadically.

For the purpose of examining the news and editorial articles which related specifically to immigration concerns, Table 4 shows the frequency of editorials and Table 5 shows the frequency of news articles published:

In specifically examining the City News articles printed in the Exponent, based on the database entries searched, the majority of these articles are brief recapitulations of the month's immigration statistics. However, there are a few articles in this section which elaborated on particular themes. For example, an article appeared on August 21, 1891 which was titled, "How the Immigrants Land."[25] This, in itself, was a little out of place, as very few articles under the "City News" heading were given titles. This article was written to describe the general condition of the immigrants as they arrived at the port of Philadelphia. This article, taking up most of the center column on page 3, spoke specifically about those disembarking from two steamships the previous week. It detailed the routines imposed by the port officials with regard to health checks and verification of various documentation, as well as where these immigrants were planning to settle after processing.

Other City News articles appeared in a number of issues which related how various charity organizations were coming to the assistance of immigrants who needed temporary shelter and food. Among these groups was the Hachnasat Orchim who had made available the "Hebrew Sheltering [25] Jewish Exponent, 9:20 (August 21, 1891), p.3.

House" to those needing a few days to get settled, and the Auxiliary Branch of the United Hebrew Charities which assisted immigrants with emergency financial help.

Every editorial published in volume nine, which related in some way to immigration, spoke directly to the concerns of those immigrants arriving from Russia. They detailed the harsh conditions which forced the Jews out of their native country. In an editorial published on July 3, 1891, the editors stated that they overheard Russian Jewish immigrants indicating they would "prefer death to an enforced return to their unbearable hardships that Russian tyranny and brutality had heaped upon them."[26]

In almost every case where editorials in volume nine were related to the problems of the Russians, the bias of the editors was in defense of these new immigrants. These editorials appeared as a response to negative reports published in other mainstream, non-Jewish, newspapers regarding not only the numbers of Russian Jews entering this country, but how their numbers would negatively affect the general welfare of the communities they were entering, specifically, and the country as a whole. The editors printed numerous articles expressing how important it was to accept these immigrants, stating the oppressive conditions which Jews back in Russia had endured. The editors also tried mightily to provide impressive statistics for the ongoing successful education and acculturation of the Russian Jews entering the United States.

Of particular concern in this volume, was discussion of the Owen Immigration Law. This law, known commonly as the "Owens Bill" was emphasized in an editorial in the March 27, 1891 issue of the Exponent. This bill, which prevented the landing of assisted immigrants, was perhaps the reason for the inflated frequency of articles related to immigration which appeared throughout volume nine, as compared with any other volume of the newspaper.

In an attempt to survey the attitude of the Jewish community throughout the period covered in this thesis, I have examined the frequency of articles appearing in each volume in relation to the general content of those articles. In reviewing the "keyword" field of the each database entry it was evident that no particular event seemed overwhelmingly responsible for swaying public opinion. Immigration concerns were, generally, a consistently discussed matter. On average, there were nearly nine articles related to immigration printed in each volume between 1887 and 1899. The Exponent dedicated entire issues to specific themes throughout the years of its publication. In these issues, the editors reserved most of its available space to articles on one particular theme. This was the case for immigration in 1891. It was during this year that an overwhelming majority of issues in volume nine contained news of increasing immigration, Russian oppression and the assimilation of these newcomers into American life. Additionally, it was repeatedly reported that the various Jewish immigration agencies were struggling to dispute the new legislation aimed at restricting immigration to America. The focus of these articles, numerous as they were, was primarily with regard to the dissemination of news related to the immigrants and the political barriers blocking more foreigners from coming to this country. Public opinion expressed in these articles, albeit subtle, was anti-government, not anti-immigrant. It seemed to be the general opinion of the Jewish agencies that it was better to struggle to assist the Jews coming to America, than to see those numbers diminished by federal legislation.

E. Conclusions

In examining the attention paid to the issues concerning immigration throughout the early years of the printing of the Jewish Exponent newspaper with the database search utility, it is easy to identify a variety of trends. Using the database, I retrieved all entries which contained the words "immigrant" or "immigration" in the keyword field. The list of those articles found indicates that most articles in the first few volumes (1:1 - 5:24) dealt primarily with generic immigration issues. That is, they were primarily concerned with the raw data of immigration statistics. In almost every case where information about the origin of the Jewish immigrants was mentioned, the articles were about Russian immigrants. All of the correspondence which offered criticism or concern about the immigrants arriving in Philadelphia were in regard to the Russian Jews. The Association and other local charities found themselves, all too often, facing internal struggles within the Philadelphia Jewish community. The members of these organizations seemed to forget that they or their parents had, in recent years, also been newcomers to this country and were subjected to similar hardships.

There was considerable attention during these early years to the various organizations and associations which had developed for the purpose of providing assistance to the immigrants. This is not to say that no other issues regarding the concerns of immigration were important at the time. There were numerous other agencies and organizations which were established for the purpose of assisting new immigrants. All of those reported by the Exponent were established and maintained by the German-Jewish community for the purpose of assisting all Jewish immigrants. Mostly, however, they came to the aid of the Russian-Jewish immigrants. Such organizations as the Young Women's Union, the Hebrew Education Society and the United Hebrew Charities had all organized to assist, in some way, those new to Philadelphia. In almost every review of the efforts of these agencies, their assistance of the Russian-Jewish population was especially noted.

In the penultimate Exponent issue of the century, an editorial appeared trying to explain that the number of Jews entering through the various American ports was not quite as large as many had asserted.[27] In the editorial, it was emphasized that while a total of 60,982 immigrants had arrived from Russia, only 24,275 were Jews. The editorial did not, however, specify which years the former figures included. Interestingly, the article said that the statistics were "very much like 30 or 40 years ago, when many persons believed all Jews in this country were Germans."

Numerous articles were written about immigration laws and violations of the laws as well as the attempts by the associations to help those immigrants who fell victim to the restrictions imposed by the laws. While the intentions of these articles was to improve the conditions for all Jews, the internal struggles of the Philadelphia Jewish community were not so admirable. Many attempts were made to try to bridge the gap between the German Jews, who had already been living in America for many years, and the Russian Jews who were just arriving. It seems, however, that the gaps between the two groups were too numerous and too wide, and would not be adequately narrowed until the middle of the twentieth century. The rift between the two groups could have been caused by numerous factors: land of origin, language, ritual practice, xenophobia are just a few of the possibilities. Regardless of the reason, the malevolence existed. Just as in our modern world we often refer to those less affluent as ourselves as living "on the other side of the tracks," so, too, did the German-American Jews distinguish themselves from the Russian-Jewish Americans. Articles in the Exponent frequently referred to the German Jews as the "uptown" Jews and referred, in denigrating style, to the new immigrants as the "downtown" Jews.

While the discord seemed to be mutual, it is important to remember that the Jewish Exponent was published under the control of the "uptown" Jews. Because of this, there were greater opportunities to further ridicule, albeit in subtle fashion, the "downtown" immigrants (see 9:23, p.2; 9:24, p.2).

While the editors of the Exponent apparently did not allow for blatantly slanderous accusations against the Russian-Jewish immigrants to be printed, various secondary sources are replete with information which verifies the discord. Generally, the native American Jews and the established Central European immigrants did not welcome the newcomers. The acculturated American-German Jews who had come decades earlier looked upon the arriving East Europeans as an uncivilized, uneducated group.[28] In the case of philanthropic efforts, it was the German Jews who made a concerted effort to help raise the necessary funds to aid the new immigrants. It was the German Jews who reached into their pockets to fund the charities, while it was the Russian Jews – even those who had been in America for many years – who received aid from the charities.[29] Despite the differences between them, the

German Jews went to great lengths to see that the Russian Jews entering this country were clothed and housed appropriately.[30]

The database search utility proved especially useful in locating articles necessary to evaluate trends during the years on which this thesis focused. Use of the database requires little effort and it is the hope of this author that researchers can gain access to information about the Jewish Exponent more quickly by employing it as a primary tool in their study. Efforts to exhaust the usefulness of the database with respect to the study of immigration, Reform Judaism or any other Jewish concern would not be possible in the eyes of this author. This, in itself, indicates the potential value of this database as a research tool. Those interested in studying the issues discussed in this thesis or other matters, are strongly encouraged to utilize the database to satisfy their own curiosities and facilitate their work.

Instructions for using Microsoft Access Database Search Utility

While the database package is very sophisticated and considered among the most powerful search engines available for general use, once basic search functions are learned, almost any data can be retrieved quickly for on-screen review or for printing. Basic computer knowledge and skills are assumed for anyone using this database utility and will not be explained here.

I) Fields available for searching:

ID – A unique reference number assigned to each entry. This field may be useful for ordering searches in a non-chronological arrangement.

Date – Refers to the date of publication.

Volume – Refers to the volume number of publication (Volumes 1-14, 21-26, and 29-30 were available for this project).

Number – Refers to the number within each volume (Generally, each volume contained 26 numbered issues).

Type – Articles were categorized as: City News, Editorial, Correspondence, Sermon, Supplement or Review.

Attribution – Refers to the author, if known, of each article. Unless otherwise indicated, all editorials were assumed to be written by the editors of the Jewish Exponent.

Heading/Title – Refers to the specific heading (i.e., Philadelphia City News) or title (i.e., "A Report From the Charities").

Keywords – Specific words or phrases which identify prominent themes contained in each article. An exhaustive list of the keywords has not been prepared. However, a list of suggested equivalents for some common keywords follows in a separate appendix.

II) Two search methods are possible:

A) Searching using a visible word or phrase on your screen:
– Highlight any word or phrase currently visible in an entry and click the filter icon on the menu bar (looks like a funnel). This will select all entries containing the selected word/phrase ONLY in the field you are currently in (i.e. If you highlight a word in the "Heading" field, only that field will be searched to find your selected word).

B) Searching using the main database filter:

– DO NOT HIGHLIGHT ANY WORDS

– Press the button on the menu bar that resembles a small funnel on top of a square (it lies between the large funnel button to the right, and the lightening bolt to the left).

– This will bring up the FILTER SEARCH utility showing you a blank entry form.

In this form, you may enter (by typing) any word(s) or phrase(s) you wish to search. It is suggested that you use "" symbols before and after each word or phrase you plan to search. The "" acts as a wildcard (represents any character or series of characters which might precede or follow the requested word(s))and allows for more inclusive searches. Additionally, all search requests must be enclosed in quotation marks (" ").

For example:
In the "KEYWORD" field, type: "HUC" to find all entries with "HUC" in the field "KEYWORD." After typing in the words you wish to search, click on the funnel button on the menu bar. If you did this correctly, you should retrieve 56 entries. (Unclick the funnel before performing another search request or else your next search request will be based on the current pool of entries selected.)

III) Additional Search Versatility

While using the filter form as described above (IIB) various 'operators' may be used to more precisely tailor your search request. For example:

Again, in the KEYWORD field, one could type:
"immigrant" OR "immigration" to find any entry which contained either of those two words, but not necessarily both of them. Or, one could type:
"immigrant" AND "association" to find any entry which contained both of those two words appearing in the same entry.
Or, one could search for complete phrases by typing either of the following:
"Mickve Israel" or "United Hebrew Charities"

IV) Additional help is available using the built-in context-sensitive help commands. This very thorough help engine can answer questions posed in plain sentence form. For example, one could type:
"How do I search for two words in one field?" Or
"Can I print my search results?"

and receive an answer or other additional information to solve your query.
