A TRADITION OF REFORM: THE MUSIC OF SALOMON SULZER

Leah Ellie Holland

Thesis submitted in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the degree of Master of Sacred Music

Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion
School of Sacred Music
New York, New York

Spring 2010

Advisors: Dr. Carole Balin, Dr. Mark Kligman

A TRADITION OF REFORM: THE MUSIC OF SALOMON SULZER

Leah Ellie Holland

This Master's thesis looks at the music of nineteenth-century Viennese composer and cantor Salomon Sulzer and attempts to answer the following questions: How did Sulzer deal with the conflict of modernity and tradition that was so prevalent during his lifetime? What was it about his particular combination of Viennese classicism and the modal nature of the traditional Jewish melodies that allowed Sulzer's music to be so riveting and timeless? How do we characterize the aesthetic he created? And is this aesthetic, which was so viable in nineteenth-century Vienna, still viable today?

It is divided into four chapters, with introduction and conclusion. The chapters explore the following: 19th-century Jewish Vienna and its liturgy, Sulzer's Musical Mileu: 19th-Century Vienna, an introductory analysis of Sulzer's magnum opus, Schir Zion, and an analysis of musical examples (Adon Olom, B'rosch Haschonoh, Way'chulu), with a conclusion dealing with the legacy of Sulzer's life and music. The thesis also includes an extensive catalog of all music included in both volumes of Schir Zion, including piece number, page number, title of piece, service/occasion, and a brief description of the piece itself.

Materials used were primarily books and articles, including the original manuscript of Sulzer's Schir Zion. Authors relied upon heavily for their research were Michael Meyer, David Ellenson, Geoffrey Goldberg, A.W. Binder, A.Z. Idelsohn, and Eric Werner.

A TRADITION OF REFORM: THE MUSIC OF SALOMON SULZER

Salomon Sulzer's (1804-1890) fame has spread over time and across continents. Millions of Jews today know at least a few selections from the great work of this nineteenth-century Viennese composer and cantor extraordinaire. Sulzer's Sh'ma and music from the Torah service have survived the test of time and are standards at religious services all over the world – from Liberal to Orthodox. While, over the 150 years since he began to compose, most of his music might have fallen out of favor, we can credit Sulzer with changing the face of Jewish music in the nineteenth century and beyond; he forever changed the way Jews perceive their music. Frankly, he revolutionized how Jews pray.

Reform Judaism in both Europe and America would not be what it is today without Sulzer. And yet, Sulzer himself was not a Reform Jew, though he created a modern musical repertoire that catapulted Jewish worship into the modern era. He endeavored to meld Jewish tradition, which he was steeped in as a child, with the newly-created sounds abounding in his generation.

Sulzer was a product and proponent of the Viennese rite (Weiner Minhag). The Viennese rite was characterized by attention to decorum, socially-relevant preaching, and aesthetics. His musical creations for the prayer service were the benchmarks of a new aesthetic norm. He brought the highest standards of contemporary musicology into the synagogue. Like the preachers of his day who attempted to combine tradition and modernity in their sermons, Sulzer did the same to music. And the balance Sulzer struck between tradition and modernity made music appealing to the Jewish population en masse.

This approach to Jewish music was unique and brand-new. Listeners of Sulzer's music appreciated the way in which he elevated their souls to a higher level. But his legacy raises important questions: What was it about his particular combination of Viennese classicism and the modal nature of the traditional Jewish melodies that allowed Sulzer's music to be so riveting and timeless? How do we characterize the aesthetic he created? And is this aesthetic, which was so viable in nineteenth-century Vienna, still viable today?

In response, Eric Werner writes that:

> …[t]he standards of decorum..., the aura of dignity that has surrounded the worship service since his time, and last, but not least, the baritone timbre of his voice – these were the three paragon innovations he established, in addition to the new musical repertoire.[1]

Indeed, Sulzer was responsible for changing the defining aesthetic components of Jewish music, which had held sway for generations. What initially seemed problematic about his work (the impossibility of melding modernity and tradition seamlessly) turned into a major contribution that would influence scores of Jewish composers who followed. Sulzer's attention to decorum and dignity turned Jewish music on its head. And Sulzer's massive two-volume work, Schir Zion, testifies to how he drew on this new principle to create a unique and legendary sound.

---

[1] Eric Werner, A Voice Still Heard...The Sacred Songs of the Ashkenazic Jews. University Park and London: The Pennsylvania State University Press, 1976, p.219.

If Sulzer was drawing from his musical milieu, we must ask whether he was merely imitating his Christian and German brethren? Or did he persist in infusing his music for the synagogue service with the nusach that he knew from childhood? Research has shown that Jewish movements that were a product of the Enlightenment responded to the character and reforming spirit of their Christian neighbors. For instance, Hamburg and Berlin, which were Protestant areas, saw more thorough reforms – such as inclusion of organ music and congregational singing – while in Vienna, which was a Catholic region, reforms tended to be more moderate.[2]

According to Abraham Zvi Idelsohn, Sulzer lived in a period that was more European-inspired and -culturally driven. He understood, however, that musical expression of a Jewish nature was very different from anything German. It is interesting, then, to discover that Schir Zion contains no specific German melodies and contours. This fact may underscore how Sulzer adhered to his Jewish musical education. His ear was trained in a Jewish idiom that had extended over centuries. The same is true of his choral music, in that it is rooted in classical church music, though anything particularly Catholic has been avoided. Thus, I argue that Sulzer expressed something original in his music, classified neither as Jewish nor classical.

Did Sulzer attempt to assimilate? We know that he opposed some Eastern European hazzanut, and instead created a unique sound that extended beyond the realm of what this traditional music had to offer. Consequently, did Sulzer preference the aesthetic over the tradition that formed him? Caroline Sawyer emphasizes that Sulzer was simply a product of his time and place, nineteenth-century Vienna. Perhaps, for Sulzer, Jewish culture and non-Jewish culture co-existed and that connection was incapable of being destroyed. She writes:

---

[2] Sawyer, Caroline. "Salomon Sulzer (1804-1890) and His Times," Presentation Notes for "History of the Cantorate," Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion, New York City, February 13, 2007, p.2.

> He did not ponder questions (as others of his time did) about whether and to what extent to be guided by halakha. He did not object to the hazzanut of provincial synagogues because they were 'Orthodox' or Hasid; he objected because it offended his ears and his sense of what was andächtig (proper, dignified, worthy, etc.).[3]

Salomon Sulzer was truly a master innovator of Jewish life. Together with his circle of friends in Vienna, he revolutionized the minhag of the synagogue, bringing dignity, decorum, rationality, class, and honor to its inner sanctum. To determine his motivation and to understand his long-lasting appeal and influence, we turn to Sulzer's biography, a history of his cultural milieu, and an analysis of his magnum opus Schir Zion.

---

[3] Sawyer, Caroline. "Salomon Sulzer (1804-1890) and His Times," Presentation Notes for "History of the Cantorate," Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion, New York City, February 13, 2007, p.6.

Chapter One
The Birth of a New Era: 19th Century Jewish Vienna and its Liturgy

Nineteenth-century Jews of Western Europe witnessed the birth of Reform Judiasm as well as the development of the Jewish Enlightenment movement (Haskalah).[4] These extraordinary outgrowths of European thought transformed the way Jews viewed their religious selves. As Jews made changes in practice and behavior, Europeans began to accept them more readily into mainstream society. This new world would provide Solomon Sulzer with the requisite environment to propel Jewish musical life to new heights.

The altered landscape of nineteenth-century Viennese Jewry emerged from a history of governmental policy that fluctuated greatly between unkind and even hostile acts toward this community and a welcome embrace of certain "useful" members of the ancient people. In 1753, the government required Jews to pay a yearly "toleration" tax, forced them to live on specific streets in a small number of houses (there were 700 of them in Vienna), and allowed only a few court Jews to live among Christians. A decade later, there was some improvement in behavior toward the community – Jews who had money and the appropriate papers, or owned a factory or other means, were allowed to live in Vienna beginning in 1764. However, they could not buy houses, and married men had to allow their beards to grow so as to be easily identified as a Jew. In addition, no synagogue building was permitted. The empress Maria Theresa, who harbored an extreme hatred for the Jews, was apparently interested in decreasing the number of Jews in her Kingdom. She hoped her strict regulations would drive them elsewhere in Europe, where they would be tolerated, and, most important, far away from her.

[4] "Reform" Judaism signified a reconciliation of modernity and Jewish tradition. However, it appeared in three different forms: Reform, liberal, and progressive. Each are distinct and are resultant of the multiple approaches that Jews took in reconciling these two almost conflicting forces.

In 1782, the Hapsburg Emperor Joseph II issued the "Edict of Toleration." In addition to relaxing censorship regulations, he allowed Jews to learn different trades and to lend money on real estate. "Tolerated Jews" could live wherever they chose in Vienna. Foreign Jews, though, could remain in Vienna no longer than was necessary to finish their business. Pre-existing laws that required differentiation in attire or prohibition from visiting public places of amusement were lifted. Despite the leniency, the 65 families living in Vienna in 1784 were not allowed to form a congregation or acquire a synagogue.

What did all of this mean? These freedoms given to a certain stratum of the Jewish community – wealthy and well-educated Jews – led to an openness toward the European Enlightenment. Moreover, some Jews applied these ideals to their ancient heritage and created a specifically Jewish Enlightenment known as the Haskalah, which has embedded within it the word "intellect" or "reason." Places such as Prussia, Galicia, and Russia became home to this phenomenon. Like the Viennese government, they, too, bestowed upon Jews privileges based on their economic status. This movement led to the development of a meeting ground for people of like-minded philosophies, regardless of background.

What did the Haskalah mean for the Jews? The movement threatened Rabbinic authority, and eventually led to the dismantling of Jewish corporate life. Moreover, it challenged Jews to rethink their notion of God and religion. If religion, as adherents of the Haskalah argued, was a means to further one's spiritual contentment and a path to happiness, then Jews needed to adapt their practices and even their beliefs.

Over time, a reaction set in against the strict rationalism of the Enlightenment. Intellectuals sought to uncover layers of the past and examine the unique aspects of individuals and communities. In asking what specifically characterizes particular groups, they uncovered the essential dynamism in history. Jews, too, rallied around the notion that change has been a constant of Jewish life, and thus they found a rationale for modifying Judaism – its practices, its theology, its worship.

Given the shift toward modernity, the Jewish community became enthusiastic about changing its musical heritage as well. This came at a price: "the loss of authentic liturgical music" in exchange for "social acceptance and equality."[5] Jews sought a religious atmosphere of order and magnificence, in keeping with the Western, non-Jewish cultural standards, regardless of what might be liturgically relevant to synagogue worship.

In this way, the nineteenth century grew with "great liturgical ferment," especially in the German-Jewish community.[6] Throughout the 1800s, a number of modern Jewish streams created new prayerbooks. All Jews, from traditional to liberal, from Orthodox to Reform, struggled to find a place in modern society. These prayerbooks serve as barometers, helping us determine the nature of Judaism in Germany at this time. Their

---

[5] Geoffrey Goldberg, "Jewish Liturgical Music in the Wake of Nineteenth-Century Reform," Sacred Sound and Social Change: Liturgical Music in Jewish and Christian Experience. Notre Dame: 1992, p.59.

[6] David Ellenson, "The Israelitsche Gebetbücher of Abraham Geiger and Manuel Joël: A Study in Nineteenth-Century German-Jewish Communal Liturgy and Religion," After Emancipation: Jewish Responses to Modernity, Cincinnati: Hebrew Union College Press, 2004, p.193.

contents help us explore such questions as: what were their ideals? what were their leaders fighting for? what did the community see as most important and even indispensable?

Innovations in Jewish worship already appeared by 1809 among the Jews of Westphalia. Israel Jacobson (1768-1828) was instrumental in introducing a number of musical innovations in both Cassel and Seesen. In many ways, liberal Protestantism provided the aesthetic backdrop for the changes being made to the Jewish musical service —namely, the introduction of prayers in German (the vernacular) and hymns, and the use of the organ. Prayers began to be recited, in contrast to the traditional chanting, and hymn-texts were taken from non-Jewish sources. When Westphalia fell in 1813, Jacobson moved to Berlin, where he and others held worship in their homes, including that of Jacob Herz Beer (1769-1825). Moreover, a synagogue was dedicated in Hamburg in 1817, and a siddur followed in 1819. As in Seesen, the Bible was read (rather than chanted) and hymns were sung. A Sephardi cantor was hired, and most melodies sung were commissioned from gentile composers. All told, which reforms were introduced by these early synagogues? Use of the vernacular. Sephardi pronunciation of Hebrew text. The organ. Boys' choirs. Decorum. Removal of piyyutim. Robes and processionals. At the same time, secular subjects became approved subjects of study for Jewish children, as the egalitarian confirmation ceremony came to replace the Bar Mitzvah ceremony in some locales.

Meanwhile, the Jewish community of Vienna, which was not emancipated until after the Revolution of 1848, managed to launch a few families to the highest echelons of society. By 1820, there were 135 tolerated families allowed to "mingle freely" with upper-class families. While most Jews remained observant and clung to traditionalism, a handful converted as a ticket into Christian society. Jewish history tells of a group of so-called "salon Jewesses" who held gatherings at their homes peopled by princes, nobles, statesmen, artists, scholars, and dignitaries.[7] At the time of the Congress of Vienna (1814-1815), Fanny von Arnstein (Nathan von Arnstein) and her sister Cecilia von Eskeles (Bernhard von Eskeles) held such meetings.

By the end of the 1810s, some Jews of Vienna began to express a desire for religious reform to that of Hamburg and Berlin. Such objectives were aided by Francis I's decree of January 22, 1820 that included a requirement that all Jewish service music be conducted in the vernacular resulting from governmental knowledge of such a change elsewhere (likely from the Hamburg Temple). Yet even with these liberal government allowances, hopes for a separate Reform temple did not materialize. Viennese Jewry was forced to continue to exist in the old model of one Jewish community, unlike other communities of Western Europe around them.

When the current synagogue building was declared unsafe and in need of demolition, a new building was erected in its place and dedicated in the spring of 1826. As Michael Meyer wrote of the entrepreneur Michael Lazar Biedermann, who led such efforts, he knew that three things were needed for a "renovation" of Jewish life in Vienna: an "attractive new building, a modern spiritual leader, and a cantor whose singing could hold its own in musically rich Vienna."[8] Biedermann and the rest of his community were

---

[7] "Vienna," Encyclopedia Judaica, first edition, online version (www.jewishencyclopedia.com) [accessed December 27, 2008].

[8] Michael Meyer, Response to Modernity: A History of the Reform Movement of truly fortunate that they found their spiritual leader and cantor in Isaac Noah Mannheimer (1793-1865) and Salomon Sulzer . This dynamic duo led the new Seitenstettengasse Synagogue to a position of grandeur and success.[9]

In order to keep the Jewish community of Vienna unified, no grand ideological changes were introduced to the liturgy. Rather, the leaders of Seitenstettengasse concentrated on form rather than content, realizing that radical reform would not be tolerated. Thus, Mannheimer, who was known as a moderate reformer, agreed to tone down his position in order to be appointed to his post in Vienna. He understood that the government would not allow reformation to occur. The mantra of the day was restoration, not reformation.[10]

With all that, Mannheimer did implement some changes in the community. Early on, he reduced the overall number of piyyutim included in the liturgy, and established the confirmation service. In the 1840s, he eliminated Kol Nidre. While indicators of overall reform, he did not alter major portions of the liturgy. Mannheimer made specific alterations to theology where he felt that modernity trumped traditionalism, but overall, he remained true to his Ashkenazic liturgical heritage.

An additional factor limiting the pace of Reform in Vienna was the large influx of observant Jews from the East. While the Viennese rite of Mannheimer and Sulzer paid "attention to decorum, aesthetics, and socially relevant preaching," all of this fit within

---

Judaism. Detroit: Wayne State University Press, 1988, p.147.

[9] It is important to note that Mannheimer was not an ordained rabbi but a pastor, moral activist, and a theologian. Perhaps this was in his favor, as his focus was more political than pastoral.

[10] Ibid., p.149.

the context of tradition and halakha.[11] Sulzer's music, for instance, unaccompanied until the 1870s, was written for cantor and sometimes for male choir. Although it was vastly different from the cantorial practice of the day, it was perfectly permissible in even the most Orthodox of settings. While Mannheimer and Sulzer accomplished a model of Reform for others, according to scholars such as Michael Meyer and Geoffrey Goldberg, they never intended to become "Reform" themselves.

Prayerbook Reform[12]

In order to determine the pace of Reform in nineteenth century Germany and Austria, I will survey four prayerbooks: those of the Hamburg reformers, Abraham Geiger, Manuel Joël, and Isaac Noah Mannheimer. Each of these men served united Jewish communities – those not divided by denominations. Thus, each wrote a prayerbook that would address the theological sentiments of their entire community. As David Ellenson argued, their works represent the "result of a spirit of compromise," showing a desire on the part of each rabbi to keep peace and unity in his community.[13] Their objective was to write German translations, which would be meaningful to their congregations. And overall, they sought to reform traditional Hebrew texts whose validity was lost to the modern age. As Lawrence Hoffman claimed and David Ellenson

---

[11] Ibid. p.151.

[12] It is due to the scholarly work of David Ellenson that the details about prayerbook reform in the following section are provided ("The Mannheimer Prayerbooks and Modern Central European Communal Liturgies" and "The Israelitsche Gebetbücher of Abraham Geiger and Manuel Joël: A Study in Nineteenth-Century German-Jewish Communal Liturgy and Religion" were instrumental resources).

[13] David Ellenson, "The Mannheimer Prayerbooks and Modern Central European Communal Liturgies," Between Tradition and Culture: The Dialectics of Modern Jewish Religion and Identity. Atlanta, Georgia: Scholars Press, 1994, p.60.

reinforced:

> 'It was not a question of providing prayerbooks for those Jews who, as a matter of principle, had broken with the beliefs and practices of Rabbinic Judaism – as was the situation that obtained in the United States. Rather, it was a question of swaying whole Jewish communities, rooted in the Rabbinic tradition and attached to their own liturgical rites, towards the acceptance of liturgical reform.' Indeed, this is why they had to proceed conservatively with their prayerbook reform.[14]

Abraham Geiger's prayerbook emerged from Hamburg where reforms were implemented over the course of the 1800s. While siddurim were published there in 1819 and 1841, and Geiger was certainly involved in this process, it was not until 1854 that he wrote his own Israelitisches Gebetbuch, with the additional title in Hebrew of Seder Tefillah Dvar Yom be-Yomo (Order of Prayer Day by Day).[15] The 1819 Hamburg prayerbook was, according to Michael Meyer, the "first comprehensive Reform liturgy," though rituals were far from fully developed.[16] The editors of this prayerbook, Meyer Israel Bresselau and Seckel Isaak Frankel, wanted to capture the spirit and essence of this new age of Enlightenment, while maintaining ties to the traditional Jewish community by retaining both Hebrew and the order and structure of the service. The fervor of the Enlightenment is demonstrated by the facts that the book opens from left to right and that prayers appear in the vernacular. Only Sephardic piyytuim were included, and the Hebrew was meant to be read with a Sephardic pronunciation, as opposed to the [14] Lawrence Hoffman, "The Liturgical Message," Gates of Understanding, Lawrence Hoffman, ed., New York: CCAR and UAHC, 1977, p.36, as quoted in David Ellenson, "The Mannheimer Prayerbooks and Modern Central European Communal Liturgies," p.62.

---

[15] David Ellenson, "The Israelitsche Gebetbücher of Abraham Geiger and Manuel Joël: A Study in Nineteenth-Century German-Jewish Communal Liturgy and Religion," p.195.

[16] Michael Meyer, Response to Modernity: A History of the Reform Movement in Judaism, p.56.

Ashkenazic way, which had dominated German Jewry for centuries. Ideological changes are apparent in the excision of texts referring to a return to the sacrificial cult, a personal messiah, and angelology. Often, editors would replace troublesome passages with other parts of the liturgy. For example, they substituted a musaf passage for something in shacharit, and even made the choice to rid liturgical passages of certain words that referenced uncomfortable theological ideas while keeping the section in question. They accomplished this via "interpretive" translation or the substitution of one Hebrew word for another that did not fit their modern sensibilities.

Despite the Hamburg reformers' efforts to keep the community together, the traditionalists protested these changes. Nevertheless, the editors of this first attempt at prayerbook reform must be commended for their desire to "calibrate between the push of tradition and the pull of the present."[17] They found a way to push Judaism forward without removing the elements that made praying Jews feel comfortable. Despite the balance that the Hamburg reformers tried to achieve, perhaps what "branded" their prayerbook "reform" was that its contents split the community. Did "reform" always refer to a break with tradition? How strong did that break have to be to push a liturgical work pass the threshold of reform? We cannot help but ask such questions as we analyze these prayerbooks.

The 1841 Hamburg prayerbook made two additions to the Sabbath and Festival prayerbook of 1819: a Shabbat afternoon service and a daily service. The scholar Jakob Petuchowski called it "a return to Tradition, and, on the other, an espousal of a more

[17] David Ellenson, "The Israelitsche Gebetbücher of Abraham Geiger and Manuel Joël: A Study in Nineteenth-Century German-Jewish Communal Liturgy and Religion," p.200.

'radical' Reform point of view."[18] David Ellenson points out that while the Pesukei D'zimrah were eliminated from the 1819 siddur, they were restored in Hebrew in the 1841 prayerbook. Notably, the editors of this siddur were rather deceptive in how they handled the restoration of this portion of liturgy, as they included the traditional line "O, may You cause a new light to shine upon Zion," in Pesukei D'zimrah, only in a smaller type than that on the rest of the page. Moreover, they surrounded the controversial phrase with parenthesis, and did not translate it into the vernacular.[19] This move makes the restoration seem "half-hearted."

Like others seeking a more universal message, the editors of the 1841 prayerbook wished to mute passages referring to the restoration of the Jewish people to the Land of Palestine and the importance of Zion. While they sometimes handled this as described above (through not including a translation into the vernacular and playing with the size of certain texts in relation to others), at other times, they accomplished this goal by substituting a "fictitious" translation into German of what might be offensive in Hebrew. And to justify such changes, they included proof by Rashi stating that Jewish tradition gives people authority to edit traditional Jewish texts. Like others before them, they included this evidence at the back of the volume.

Although Abraham Geiger disputed much included by the editors of the 1819 and 1841 Hamburg prayerbooks, he tended to follow in their footsteps with regard to Reform

---

[18] Jakob Petuchowski, Prayerbook Reform in Europe: The Liturgy of European Liberal and Reform Judaism. New York: World Union for Progressive Judaism, Ltd., 1968, p.54.

[19] David Ellenson, "The Israelitsche Gebetbücher of Abraham Geiger and Manuel Joël: A Study in Nineteenth-Century German-Jewish Communal Liturgy and Religion," p.200.

theology, including priesthood, sacrifice, and chosenness. Often, he maintained controversial passages on these subjects, though he translated them into some alternative German concept for the sake of maintaining Reform ideals. For example, in his landmark 1854 siddur, Geiger retained the Hebrew from Isaiah 2:3: "For from Zion shall go forth Torah, and the word of God from Jerusalem." However, in place of the translating the Hebrew teitzei (shall go forth) directly, he creatively referred to this Hebrew term as "went forth," assuming that the past historical memory is all that is worth retaining.[20]

Another example is found when looking at the blessings in the 1854 siddur's daily Amidah. Here, rather than relying on creative translations, he composed a new blessing altogether that focuses on "sounding the great shofar for our freedom" and saving the people of Israel who have been scattered to the four corners of the earth.[21]

Abraham Geiger believed that change rooted in the strong Jewish traditions of Tanakh and Talmud would have a better chance of success and acceptance. As he put it,

> I can assert with full conviction that the ordering of the prayers does not contradict the laws of the Talmud and the rabbis as long as the essential prayers, Shema and its blessings, expressing the acceptance of the yoke of the kingdom of Heaven and the remembrance of the Exodus from Egypt, and the Amidah are contained therein.[22]

Because the Hamburg rite and his own siddur contained these elements, Geiger found the strong reaction of the more traditional community to be unfounded.

Indeed, Geiger and the editors of the Hamburg siddur never intended to create a

---

[20] David Ellenson, "The Israelitsche Gebetbücher of Abraham Geiger and Manuel Joël: A Study in Nineteenth-Century German-Jewish Communal Liturgy and Religion," p.209.

[21] Ibid., p.209.

[22] Michael Meyer, Response to Modernity: A History of the Reform Movement in Judaism, p.117.

new branch of Judaism. About the early Hamburg Reformers, Jakob Petuchowski wrote:

> The farthest thing from their mind was the formation of a new Jewish sect...The Judaism to which they wanted to bring liturgical reform was a Judaism based on Bible, Talmud, and Codes; and it was by an appeal to these accepted bases of Jewish life that they sought to justify their place within Judaism.[23]

By basing their decisions on classical Jewish exegetes, they could not conceive of any Jew rejecting what they had devised. They regarded themselves as rooted in the Jewish past.

Before long, a rival prayerbook to Geiger's emerged. Manuel Joël, Geiger's successor in Breslau, undertook the task of revising his predecessor's 1854 prayerbook by reinstating more tradition.[24] Joël was closely aligned with the reformer Zacharias Frankel (1801-1875), who espoused the tenets of Positive-Historical Judaism, a Judaism indicative of conservative liberalism. Joël respected Geiger's work, and did not want to alienate him, but his community wanted desired a prayerbook that combined traditional liturgy with Geiger's Reform perspective. Thus, Joël used Geiger's 1854 prayerbook as the basis of his work, making modifications that pushed the liturgy in a more traditional direction.

Joël was a retainer rather than a destroyer; he sought to keep the traditional text as much as possible. Yet he was a great fan of modernity and the focus that this era placed on the individual over the community. He said,

> On the one hand, we must express the freedom of the individual, but, on the other, especially as far as ritual is concerned, the individual must give expression not

---

[23] Jakob Petuchowski, Prayerbook Reform in Europe: The Liturgy of European Liberal and Reform Judaism, p.98.

[24] David Ellenson, "The Israelitsche Gebetbücher of Abraham Geiger and Manuel Joël: A Study in Nineteenth-Century German-Jewish Communal Liturgy and Religion," p.214.

> merely to that which moves him, but also to that which affects Israel and the total community.[25]

Like many Jews of his time, Joël was in a quandary, caught between tradition and modernity.

Joël found creative ways to avoid conflict in his liturgical rendering of the sacred service. For the Amidah, he dealt with the controversial passages on Jerusalem and the restoration and return to Zion and the sacrificial cult by adhering to the German liberal tradition of saying the intermediary blessings silently. People could then say what felt most comfortable to them; there was no attempt to come to a communal consensus. Joël also removed sections of the liturgy that depicted gentiles in a negative fashion or made distinctions between Israel and the other nations. Petuchowski notes that:

> Joël printed a "reformed" text of the controversial passages "in large print, and the German translation would refer to that 'reformed' version. But also, in small print and without translation, Joël would restore the traditional text, for the benefit of those congregants who were uncompromisingly attached to it."[26]

He found it appropriate to substitute an interpretive translation in place of a literal one, as he had Geiger's example to follow.

Joël differed from Geiger in that he was more comfortable with Jewish particularity. For instance, Joël used the phrase "from among all peoples" in his prayerbook, while Geiger substituted something more innocuous. There are several other examples of particularity in his work, including mention of restoring divine presence to

---

[25] David Ellenson, "The Israelitsche Gebetbücher of Abraham Geiger and Manuel Joël: A Study in Nineteenth-Century German-Jewish Communal Liturgy and Religion," p.215, as quoted in Plaut, The Rise of Reform Judaism, p.181.

[26] David Ellenson, "The Israelitische Gebetbücher of Abraham Geiger and Manuel Joël: A Study in Nineteenth-Century German-Jewish Communal Liturgy and Religion," p.216, as quoted in Petuchowski, Prayerbook Reform in Europe: The Liturgy of European Liberal and Reform Judaism, p.171.

Zion and Israel's mission to bring God's teachings to all of humanity.

In all three of the prayerbooks analyzed thus far, it can be seen that "a common Central European context informed [the] authors...Simply put, the traditionalist ideological consensus and cultural proclivities that marked Joël and Geiger were simply too great to justify the creation of separate religious movements."[27] While the Hamburg editors may have desired a more radical break with tradition than Geiger or Joël, all of them found difficulty in severing ties completely. Although these liturgical efforts might be viewed as the first attempts at reform liturgy, it is important to remember that the authors intended to remain a part of the wider Jewish community. Perhaps the world was not yet ready for a true reform revolution, and Mannheimer, who we turn to next, was merely following the lead of his contemporaries in the creation of his sacred service.

Isaac Noah Mannheimer was the son of a cantor and thus no stranger to the Jewish religious world. He was known as a religious conservative, and at the same time, a moderate reformer. His first prayerbook, Mahazor L'moadei El – Festgebete der Israeliten nach der gottesdienstlichen Ordnung im israelitischen Bethause zu Wien, published in 1840, shows a strong bond with Jewish tradition. Mannheimer said in response to the reformers in Frankfurt, "...Judaism is not a philosophical doctrine but an historical institution, sanctified by divine revelation, and firmly established and unified by ancestral tradition and filial piety and devotion."[28] This commitment to tradition

---

[27] David Ellenson, "The Israelitische Gebetbücher of Abraham Geiger and Manuel Joël: A Study in Nineteenth-Century German-Jewish Liturgy and Religion," p.220.

[28] Isaac Noah Mannheimer, "Getachten des Herrn Predigers Dr. Mannheimer in Wien," in Salomon Abraham Trier, ed., Rabbinische Gutachten ueber die Beschneidung (Frankfurt a. Main, 1844), pp.89-104, as quoted in David Ellenson, "The Mannheimer Prayerbooks and Modern Central European Communal Liturgies," p.65.

would characterize all of his liturgical work. Mannheimer was like Joël, an adherent of the Positive-Historical school of Judaism.

Despite his traditionalist leanings, Mannheimer believed firmly in the use of vernacular in prayer and that every generation was allowed to alter liturgical texts as necessary. After all, he argued, both Sephardic and Ashkenazic rites had developed, proving that there was no single, true rite. He did not believe that the sacrificial cult was one that Judaism would ever return to, and he sought to excise passages referring to it. Mannheimer strayed far from martyrology. In many ways, his struggles were similar to the Reformers of his day.

However, Mannheimer's later prayerbook entitled Tefillot Yisrael – Gebete der Israeliten (1843) is considered traditional. Jacob Petuchowski does not even include it on his list of European Liberal and Reform prayerbooks.[29] What does Mannheimer do specifically that makes this work so traditional? He did not alter the phrases referring to a return to Zion, but instead offered a creative German translation. Mannheimer spiritualizes the nationalistic hopes of the people of Israel, taking away the feeling of "otherness" typical to these passages. He interpreted the notion of sacrifices metaphorically, indicating that prayer is now the daily offering in their stead. Lastly, he was faithful to the texts that referenced resurrection of the dead.[30]

Nevertheless, he did sanction changes. Instead of translating shelo asani goy as "who has not made me a gentile," he translates the passage as "who has made me an

---

[29] Jakob Petuchowski, Prayerbook Reform in Europe: The Liturgy of European Liberal and Reform Judaism, pp.1-21, 393.

[30] All of the examples included in the paragraph preceding this footnote are referenced in David Ellenson, "The Mannheimer Prayerbooks and Modern Central European Communal Liturgies," pp.67-70.

Israelite." He removed passages that asked God to avenge the blood of God's servants in both the Av Harachamim (which precedes the Ashrei in the traditional Torah service) and the Avinu Malkeinu.

Mannheimer's prayerbook Tefillot Yisrael is not what we today would consider a Reform prayerbook. Like the others analyzed, all four of these significant prayerbooks do not argue for radical change. Rather, they are attempts to bridge from a traditional ground to a new era, which lies still in the future. They are responsible for opening the door to modernity, albeit very slowly. They acknowledged that multiple rites could co-exist and that liturgy could conflict with modern sensibilities. For our story, what they did was open a door for Salomon Sulzer to walk through, allowing a creative master to compose synagogue music that was both inspiringly modern and halakhically valid.

Chapter Two
Salomon Sulzer's Musical Mileu: Nineteenth-Century Vienna

Throughout much of modern history, Vienna has been considered a cultural jewel among the nations. Its production of superior arts is incomparable to that of its neighbors. The story of its musical life is especially remarkable. It was a center for extraordinary composers, gentile and Jewish alike. The lifting of certain discriminatory legislation enabled Jews of nineteenth-century Vienna to roam relatively freely in the creative melting pot of the Austro-Hungarian capitol. Salomon Sulzer spent much of his life not only surrounded by cultural genius but at the very center of that magical, musical world. Indeed, Sulzer came to write extraordinary music admired by his Christian colleagues. The government gave him both privileges and awards. And the modernizing Jews of the capital and beyond benefited – even to this day – from his reforms and reinventions of the basic worship service.

Jewish liturgy would not have been what it is today without Sulzer. He is singly responsible for changing and elevating liturgical music to be on par with modern music of the finest quality. His introduced a brand new musical service to the liturgy, and, most important, redefined the sound of Jewish music. Changing what is acceptable to the ear is about changing what is acceptable to the soul. This proved Sulzer's greatest task.

Vienna has quite a rich musical story to tell. From 1740 to 1806, Vienna was considered the birthplace of the most prominent compositions, despite the fact that the composers themselves, with the exception of Franz Schubert, were not Viennese by birth. In fact, in no other political entity were there so many religious and secular musical institutions. While the city may not have given birth to sensational composers of its own, it no doubt gave musical masters studying there a place to mature and grow.[31] Among the stunning composers who did make Vienna their home at some point were Mozart, Beethoven, Gluck, Schubert, Wagner, Brahms, and Haydn.

During the nineteenth-century in Vienna, opera and symphony were the most highly regarded musical genres. Though fashions waxed and waned, there was always a partiality for grandness, majesty, and stateliness. If it was not big and held in a grand theater with magnificent musicians, it was simply not acceptable to a Viennese crowd of the day. Music enthusiasts rooted themselves in Baroque, Classical, and Romantic compositions, especially those written by native Viennese composers such as Schubert. In fact, when in the 1840s there was a shift away from Vienna's classical past, members of the musical society reacted quickly. They identified this as a major problem, and resolved to assist musicians in moving back towards what was considered to be the authentic tradition of Vienna. Classicism simply defined Vienna to its very core.

Scholar Peter Gradenwitz argues that Vienna is home to three schools of music. First, it was the capital of music par excellence, home to Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, Joseph Haydn, and Ludwig von Beethoven. Second, although lighter in temperament, but certainly no less influential, it was the stomping ground of Johann Strauss's waltz and operetta. Third, it was connected to musical superpowers like Gustav Mahler, Arnold Schoenberg, Alban Berg, and Anton Webern. All three of these schools changed the face of musical history.[32] It is impossible to imagine nineteenth-century music and

---

[31] "Vienna," The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, Vol. 26, 2001 edition, p.559.

[32] Peter Gradenwitz, "Jews in Austrian Music," The Jews of Austria: Essays on their development thereafter without these schools. In sum, Vienna was crucial in the process of music-making.

At the same time, Vienna offered some freedom to those who sought to create sacred musical traditions. For Jews, the path to musical creativity was especially difficult, given the hardships placed upon them. As Gradenwitz reminds us,

> ...at the time the classical school was flourishing in Vienna, Jewish emancipation had not yet developed sufficiently for Jews to participate actively in the social and artistic life of the countries in which they lived. The Jewish community of Vienna developed only slowly during the eighteenth century, after hundreds of years of terror and banishment. It was re-organized only in 1790, and set up its first house of worship as late as 1826.[33]

Though we might imagine the Jewish musical world of Vienna to have been light years away from mainstream society, aspects of it were as current and profound as its gentile counterparts. For this reason, Gradenwitz assigns musical history a fourth school, namely the religious music of Salomon Sulzer. His work breathed new life into the liturgy and was utilized not only in Viennese synagogues but in those throughout Europe and, eventually, over the world. Indeed, his compositions are performed across the globe and down to our own day. Sulzer's musical accomplishments were extraordinary and his story aptly tells the tale of a man larger than life.

Salomon Sulzer was born on March 30, 1804, in Hohenems, a small town in Vorarlberg, an Austrian province between Tyrol and Switzerland. His parents were faithful adherents of the Jewish faith. The apocryphal story is told that, as a small boy of seven, when Sulzer fell into a river and was miraculously saved from drowning, his mother determined that he should be dedicated to the service of God. To symbolize this decision, she dressed him solely in white. While Sulzer's later writings contradict the story, it certainly makes for a dramatic opening tale of a man who certainly dedicated his life in service to God. This story is much like that of the biblical Samuel, whose mother Hannah prayed to God for a child. She promised she would dedicate this child to the service of God should she be fortunate enough to conceive. Thus, both Samuel and Salomon Sulzer share the promise of dedicated service to God. In this way, Sulzer is elevated to a priestly level. If biblical greatness was manifest in nineteenth-century Europe, it belonged to Salomon Sulzer.

---

Life, History and Destruction, Josef Fraenkel, ed. London: Vallentine Mitchell, 1967, p.17.

[33] Ibid., p.17.

Sulzer's education was diverse. As a youngster, he attended a yeshiva in Switzerland where he trained in Talmud and then received musical training in Karlsruhe in Prussia. He was known to have an outstanding voice. Already by the age of thirteen, he had been appointed cantor in his hometown of Hohenems. As he wrote,

> I was only 13 years old—barely at the age of religious majority—when I first stood before the prayer-lectern. People regarded me as very talented, but also as too young for the office. The authorities, then under the imperial regime of His Majesty Franz I, intervened to grant me a three-year interval in which to mature and complete my training."[34]

It would seem that some resented Sulzer's prodigious talent at such a young age, and so the matter of his appointment was sent to the capital for none other than Emperor Franz Joseph to approve, on the condition that he first devote himself to further cantorial studies. The fact that the matter was considered by the Emperor was extraordinary. This might signify either new imperial interest in the Jews or that Sulzer's talent was so remarkable that it garnered the attention of even the Emperor. Of course, we might consider that the story is apocryphal, though still telling in the "details" that have come down to us.

---

[34] Hanoch Avenary, Kantor Salomon Sulzer und seine Zeit – Eine Dokumentation. Sigmaringen: Jan Thorbecke, 1985. Unpublished translation by Caroline Sawyer, p.14.

Various cantors trained Sulzer, and one man by the name of Lippmann took the boy through southern Germany, France, and Switzerland along with a itinerant group that conducted Shabbat services in each community visited. The group became so popular that it replaced public concerts in many smaller communities and found a following in larger communities as well. This tradition of meshor'rim – supporting singers (both a tenor and a bass) accompanying a traveling cantor – formed a trio of sorts, though of unequal parts. Each of the accompanying singers would stand on either side of the hazzan and acted as "instrumental accompaniment" to the liturgical melody.

For three years, Sulzer had a life of travel. What he learned on the road, he squirreled away for his return to Hohenems. The experience became a model for his future, as he suggested in Alsace-Lorraine:

> …[I] encountered organized Jewish communities which afforded me a deeper insight into the requirements of synagogue life. I searched everywhere for the ideal of my future profession, seeking that for which my soul was yearning. Everywhere I gathered impressions which had a determining and shaping influence on my conception of the cantorial office and, even before the three years were up, I returned to my native town of Hohenems to deposit the first fruits on the altar of God at the age of 16.[35]

This notion of "first fruits on the altar" is another reminder of the parallels forged between Sulzer and Samuel. After all, Samuel was just weaned when his mother took him to Eli the Priest, making good on her promise to give him to God. Sulzer, too, had been promised to divine service by his mother following his near-drowning at age seven. By the time he was 16 and sufficiently educated, he, too, began to serve God in the way that he was meant to – through music.

---

[35] Eric Mandell, "Salomon Sulzer 1804-1890," The Jews of Austria. Josef Fraenkel, ed. London: Vallentine Mitchell, 1967, p.223.

In the Hohenems synagogue, he studied under the tutelage of the hazzan, Salomon Eichberg (1786-1880), who himself trained under Israel Löwy (1773-1832).[36] While Eichberg taught him the requisite skills for liturgical singing and music, Sulzer's well-to-do parents gave him a proper general education. Later, upon arriving in Vienna in 1825, he continued his general musical studies with Ignaz Xaver Seyfried (1776-1841). The latter had impeccable pedigree: he was a friend and disciple of Beethoven, a pupil of Haydn, and a friend of Mozart. While in Vienna, Sulzer also studied composition with Josef Fischhof (1804-1857).[37]

In addition to studying and on-the-job training, Sulzer responded to the call to create a magnum opus—his divine service. Even before arriving to Vienna, Sulzer had been engaged in composition. He wrote that he worked early on in remote cities, removed from art and the influences of other artists, using his own taste as guidance for his work. He was surprised to find that these early attempts had gained the attention of Jews as far away as the capital.

At the age of 22, Sulzer's community granted him a leave of absence of eight weeks to travel to Vienna. The months turned into years, and Sulzer never did return to [36] Both Löwy and Eichberg were well-known, important hazzanim of their day. Löwy had attempted to move the synagogues in Europe past the state of musical chaos that they were in, but he did not find success. A.W. Binder writes that it took someone with the talent, dedication, and personality of Sulzer to accomplish this.

---

[37] Josef Fischhoff was a pupil of Ignaz Seyfried, who himself was a pupil of Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart. Both Fischhoff and Seyfried composed liturgical music for the Vienna synagogue service of Salomon Sulzer's.

his former pulpit in Hohenems. Rather, he was drawn into the musical milieu of the capital city and engaged in synagogue reform beside Rabbi Isaac Noah Mannheimer. The latter realized that he could accomplish his goal of devising a modern service for the Seitenstettengasse Synagogue with the help of the musical genius Sulzer. Thus, he brought the same to Vienna in order to officiate as cantor.

On February 12, 1826, at an audition performance in Vienna, Sulzer sang traditional melodies, along with two auxiliary singers (meshor'rim) from his hometown. He was very well received. The Viennese Jewish community invited Sulzer to be its cantor, and he officially started on April 26, 1826 for the Sabbath and High Holy Days. Sulzer graciously sought to become a member of the Seitenstettengasse Synagogue community and became immersed in the cultural life in Vienna.

Although he married a woman from his hometown of Hohenems in 1827, the couple, who were very much in love, was at home in the capital city. Sulzer attended secret meetings and befriended those who populated the circle of artists in the city. Franz Schubert became the most important influence on Sulzer. His stamp left a deep mark on Sulzer's music. Schubert taught Sulzer to combine traditional Jewish musical elements with classical elements from the Christian world. As the scholar Eric Werner stated, "Sulzer was the first personality since de' Rossi who combined in himself a thorough knowledge of Jewish tradition, a high musical erudition, and a full appreciation of classical music."[38] Sulzer brought this combination of tradition and erudition to his [38] Eric Werner, A Voice Still Heard...The Sacred Song of the Ashkenazic Jews. University Park: The Pennsylvania State University Press, 1976, p.211.

Salomone de' Rossi (1570-1630) was an Italian Jewish composer who sought to bridge the music of the Renaissance and the music of the Baroque by seamlessly transitioning between the two in his compositions.

congregation. He endeavored to reform the tradition by merging it with the beauty inherent in modern compositions.

It is important to note that reforming music was no easy task in Sulzer's day. Many scholars have pointed out that synagogue music of the time was in a "corrupt" state. Sulzer was well aware that while certain modal and melodic elements characterized traditional Jewish music depending on the season, over time these so-called "pure" melodies had been altered to such a degree that they were no longer discernible or recognizable. Sulzer had no contemporary models for "purifying" the ancient but corrupted melodies. While Salomone de' Rossi of Mantua had attempted this kind of reform in the seventeenth century, he died mysteriously at a young age, before realizing his dream of re-creating Jewish music. Sulzer set out alone then to find the pure nusach for the various liturgical pieces of the sacred service. He traced them to their earliest roots and thereby hoped to cleanse them of centuries of "dross" and then harmonize them with modernity for all time.

By the eighteenth century, synagogue music focused on cantorial rhapsody with Baroque and Rococo adornments.[39] There was occasional three-part harmony that was often improvised. In contrast, the nineteenth-century Reformers who embraced Jewish emancipation, welcomed (democratic) participation. To realize this musically in worship, Sulzer developed Jewish hymns in a Protestant style, thus enabling Jews to participate in the music of prayer along with the liturgy.

In effect, Sulzer reformed the music of liturgy in the same way that Mannheimer

---

[39] Cantorial rhapsody is a type of liturgical music where a basic melody is sung to the text, and extensive melodic sections are inserted at certain points, sung on "ah."

reformed the words of prayer. Sulzer spoke of his relationship with Mannheimer and their joint goal in his Denkschrift an die Wiener israelitische Kultusgemeinde in 1886:

> To me it appeared that the confusion in the synagogue service was a consequence of the need for a restoration, but one based on historical ground; and that we might discover the original, noble forms to which we should anchor ourselves, developing them in artistic style…Jewish liturgy must satisfy all musical demands while remaining Jewish.[40]

Together, Sulzer and Mannheimer attempted to minimize internal schisms within the Central European Jewish community by minimizing the distance from tradition. In the end, Sulzer would be far more successful than Mannheimer; his influence would be everlasting.

Sulzer's accomplishments are visible in his legendary work Schir Zion, the first volume of which was published in 1840. Containing musical liturgy for Shabbat, the Three Festivals, the New Year, the Day of Atonement, Purim, Tisha B'Av, and miscellaneous songs, Sulzer reported that of the 159 compositions, 37 compositions were written by other composers, including Schubert, von Seyfried, Fischhof, and others. Thirty-six of the pieces were based on traditional synagogue melodies. Yet, for the most part, Sulzer deferred to the secular and church styles of his day in his compositional efforts. Unable to resist the effects of being a true Classicist in a city known for its Classicism, he wrote in his introduction to Schir Zion:

> I see it as my duty...to consider as far as possible the traditional tunes bequeathed to us, to cleanse their ancient and decorous character from the later accretions or tasteless embellishments, to restore their original purity, and to reconstruct them in accordance with the text and the rules of harmony.[41]

Sulzer found little to preserve from the Shabbat tradition. He considered the extant

---

[40] Peter Gradenwitz, "Jews in Austrian Music," p.19.

[41] Eric Werner, A Voice Still Heard...The Sacred Song of the Ashkenazic Jews, p.213.

liturgy less than authentic, arguing that many profane melodies had been retained by the generations that preceded him. Thus, he felt comfortable substituting these "standards" with the melodies of non-Jewish composers, and creating, in essence, a new tradition.

Sulzer followed up with a second volume of Schir Zion in 1865 (which was likely printed in 1866). Having honed his skills and garnered far more experience, Sulzer decided to try his hand at traditional hazzanut for cantor and choir. He understood that this volume was markedly different from the one that came before it. As he said:

> This second part should not merely supplement its predecessor—it is a separate collection of liturgical songs for all occasions, both ordinary and extraordinary… For that reason it contains everything proved by long-standing usage to be practicable for ritual purposes, as well as of musical worth, and which has already found a permanent place in the hearts of congregants…I have devoted special attention to the venerable tunes of the great Nestor Maharil, often using them as the basis of my own compositions."[42]

This volume surpassed the first. While both remain a legacy of musical genius, the latter gave the Jewish people a combination of tradition and modernity. The fruits of the second volume allowed the community to experience familiar melodies with a new twist. He gave the people Reform, without removing what remained comfortable to them. In this way, Sulzer facilitated the maintenance of a single community, rather than splitting it down the middle between reformers and traditionalists.

Sulzer, a politico of sorts, was involved in the battle of the Vienna March Revolution in 1848, and, as a result, was imprisoned for a time. But because he had attained such high marks, the government pardoned him. In fact, by 1868, Sulzer had achieved such a high standing that the government bestowed upon him the title Knight of the Order of Franz Joseph, a feat nearly unheard of for a Jew. He received additional [42] Eric Mandell, "Salomon Sulzer 1804-1890," p.227.

---

honors and gifts, including the Great Gold Medal of Austria and Russia for Art and Science, and diamond rings from Emperor Ferdinand, Emperor Franz Joseph, and the Grand Duke of Baden. Moreover, the municipality of Vienna honored him with the freedom of the city, just to name a few.[43]

After 55 years as the cantor of the Seitenstettengasse Synagogue, Sulzer retired on April 2, 1881, and died nine years later on January 17, 1890, at the age of 85. It is said that "his whole life was a song, a song as sweet and beautiful as that which he sang."[44]

---

[43] Because many Jews of the time were restricted to certain areas of the city and certain occupations, this bestowal of freedom to do anything in the city at any time was significant.

[44] A. Guttman, "The Life of Salomon Sulzer," Year Book of the Central Conference of American Rabbis, Volume XIV (1904), p.234.
All fourteen of his children appear in some form on his death certificate. His four sons, Julius, Emile, Carl, and Joseph signed their names' while the names of his daughters Marie Belart, Hermine Gingold, Henriette Biacchi, Rose Wagner, Rachel Niederhofheim, Auguste Fischel, and Fanny Abrest are listed as well.

Chapter Three
An Introductory Analysis of Schir Zion

Despite his anti-Semitic leanings and his personal dislike of Sulzer, Franz Liszt wrote the following after hearing him lead prayer at the Seitenstettengasse Synagogue:

> Only once we witnessed what a really Judaic art could be, as the Israelites would have poured out their suppressed passions and sentiments, and revealed the glow of their fire in the noble art forms of their Asiatic Genius, in its full majesty and fantasy and dreams…In Vienna we heard the famous…Sulzer, who served in the capacity of precentor in the synagogue…For moments we could penetrate into his real soul and recognize the secret doctrines of the fathers…Seldom were we so deeply moved by emotion as on that evening, so shaken that our soul was entirely seized by meditation and given to participation in the service…"[45]

There is no doubt that Jew and non-Jew alike were drawn to Sulzer, his Schir Zion, and the magic of his music. He had the ability to "shake one's soul."

Yet like all geniuses, Sulzer had his critics. Eric Werner and others have regarded Sulzer's contributions to synagogue music as not much more than an imitation of the Classicists around him. Werner claimed,

> Sulzer's well-known establishment of order and decorum in the divine service likewise must be considered historically. In this respect, he followed the trend of his contemporaries who were chiefly interested in loosening the spiritual shackles, which centuries of ghettoization had clamped upon the Jewish practice and ideology."[46]

I would argue that Sulzer was concerned about freeing the Jews from centuries of mental persecution, and viewed the act of upgrading their music as a means of achieving this. We could debate whether Sulzer's goal of dignifying Jewish music even required the justification that years of governmental oppression stripped the Jews of the creativity he wished to restore. But there is no denying that Sulzer achieved such a goal. He used the most prevalent musical medium available to him, classicism, to produce a new type of traditional Jewish musical, which would, in the end, surpass its century's-long repertoire and sound.

---

[45] Eric Werner, A Voice Still Heard…The Sacred Song of the Ashkenazic Jews, p.215.

[46] Eric Werner, From Generation to Generation. New York: American Conference of Cantors, 1967, p.159.

In his attempt to elevate Jewish music to the standards of his day, Sulzer combined principles of hazzanut with Western ideals. Volume I of Schir Zion (1840) is infused with a classicist style. Sulzer was a pioneer in transforming non-Western music to Western ideals; he worked on original synagogue melodies with neither time signature nor bar lines and forced them into metered, rhythmic lines. There is no denying that after Sulzer worked with them, they were distorted from the original. And, one could argue, that this very distortion was an aberration from Sulzer's stated goal of "purification." While he pulled the synagogue melodies away from their traditional free-form state, he also provided rhythm which gave the pieces order, leading to dignity and majesty, to which nineteenth-century modern Jews aspired.

In keeping with his objective of orderliness, Sulzer advocated for a standard pronunciation of Hebrew in Schir Zion. Even when he invited outside composers unfamiliar with Hebrew to contribute to his work, he ensured that they followed his Hebrew guidelines. Later in his career, he advocated for the organ, as evident by the substantial uptick in pieces written for organ and choir or organ and hazzan in the second volume, where none had existed in the first.

Volume one is notable for its five- to eight-part choral compositions set for a cappella choir. While some might consider Sulzer an imitation of Salomone de Rossi or Monteverdi because of such settings, upon closer examination, it is clear that Sulzer "is firmly anchored in the style and tonality of the Vienna classics."[47] Even with this use of the classical, Viennese style, Sulzer did retain some elements of tradition. His cantorial recitatives have a few embellishments, and are traditional in a very noble way. Also, in this first volume, he ably kept with the tradition with regard to the Three Festivals and High Holidays. He did less so with Shabbat.

In volume two, Sulzer wrote music for voice and organ and solo organ in addition to retaining his a cappella approach. The music is increasingly modal, although in future reprints, Sulzer's son Joseph changed some of these pieces to major and minor.[48] There is less grand choral music because the hazzan takes a far more prominent position in the service than had been visible in Sulzer's compositions heretofore. Recitatives, the mainstay of davening in the Jewish synagogue, begin to be accompanied by organ. Generally, music critics say the following about the grand composer:

> ...all the experts testify that it was Sulzer who restored order, dignity, and lofty aesthetic form in the musical liturgy of Judaism, that he had rescued it from a desolate state of amorphous and capricious negligence…The second volume is incomparably superior to the first, which seemed indebted to the Haydn-Mozart style…at any rate, German. The chants of the second part have not only more liturgical character, but they bear—and this is very important indeed—more distinctly, the stamp of genuine Jewish-oriental music…"[49]

In sum, the first volume was Classicist, while the second was modal and traditional.[50]

---

[47] Eric Werner, A Voice Still Heard…The Sacred Song of the Ashkenazic Jews, p.213.

[48] Schir Zion has been reprinted five times to date. Joseph Sulzer played a large role in the first reprint, making some changes to the actual works and adding his own compositions where he saw fit.

[49] Ibid., p.217.

[50] For a more detailed overview, please turn to appendix A where I list musical selections as they appeared in the first edition of Schir Zion with volume number, Sulzer's item number, page number, name of listing, event, and a brief description of the musical

This modal approach as used in volume two was indicative of Sulzer's use of a style that was prominent among Eastern European cantors. As these cantors came to study with Sulzer, he realized the value of their stylistic approach and adopted it for use in his own compositions.

Sulzer attempted to infuse music into nearly every portion of the service. As the chart below shows, the majority of the liturgical elements were moments in which Sulzer found musical accompaniment necessary. For Sulzer, this is indicative of how instrumental music was in setting the tone of a service. Reform did not mean that the text should be recited instead of sung. On the contrary, Sulzer believed that musical moments should be preserved in the process of reform – yet presented in a new and dignified way.

The chart below is a comparison of the Kabbalat Shabbat and Arvit L'Shabbat liturgies in Mannheimer's siddur (1846) and the music selections of Volumes No. I and II of the first edition of Sulzer's Schir Zion (1840 and 1865). Note that the first volume of Schir Zion volume appeared before the Mannheimer siddur, and the other almost 20 years after. Thus, we can infer that these men did not develop a written and musical liturgy at the same time. For the most part, Mannheimer followed the standard Kabbalat Shabbat and Arvit L'Shabbat service. We can assume that Sulzer, too, intended to provide his congregation with rich and bold musical selections that filled out the standard service.

---

layout of the piece.

Chart A—Mannheimer and Sulzer: A Liturgical Comparision[51]

Mannheimer Kabbalat Shabbat	Sulzer Kabbalat Shabbat
L'chu N'ran'na—Psalm 95 (p.96)
Shiru Ladonai Shir Chadash—Psalm 96 (p.97)
Adonai Malach Tagel Ha'aretz—Psalm 97 (p.98)
Shiru…Ki Nifla'ot Asah—Psalm 98 (p.99)
Adonai Malach Yirgizu Amim—Psalm 99 (p.100)
Mizmor L'David—Psalm 29 (p.101)
L'cha Dodi (p.102)	L'cha Dodi (5 settings)
Shamor V'zachor	Shamor V'zachor (5 settings)
Likrat Shabbat	Likrat Shabbat (1 setting)
Mikdash Melech	Mikdash Melech (7 settings)
Hina'ari	Hitna'ari (1 setting)
Hitor'ri	Hitor'ri (6 settings)
Lo Teivoshi
V'hayu Limshisa (p.103)	V'hayu Limshisa (6 settings)
Yamin U'smol
Boi V'shalom	Boi V'shalom (3 settings)
Mizmor Shir L'yom Shabbat—Psalm 92[52]	Mizmor Shir L'yom Hashabbat (1 setting)
	Mah Gadlu (1 setting)
	V'ata Marom (1 setting)
	Tov L'hodot (2 settings)
	Ki Hinei (1 setting)
Adonai Malach Geut Lavesh—Psalm 93[53]	Adonai Malach (2 settings)
Psalms 134; 46:8/46:12; 84:13; 20:10
V'hu Rachum Y'chapeir Avon
Arvit L'Shabbat
Bar'chu (p.104)	Bar'chu (3 settings)
Ma'ariv Aravim	Ma'ariv Aravim (2 settings)
Ahavat Olam (p.105)	Ahavat Olam (1 setting)
Sh'ma Yisrael	Sh'ma Yisrael (1 setting)
V'ahavta
V'haya im Shamo'a (p.106)	L'ma'an Yirbu (1 setting)
Vayomer Adonai el Moshe (p.107)	V'lo Taturu (1 setting)
Emet V'emunah
Mi Chamocha (p.108)	Mi Chamocha (2 settings)

[51] Sources: Mannheimer, Issac Noah. Tefilot Israel: Gebete der Israeliten. Vienna: Druck und Vering, 1846. Sulzer, Salomon. Schir Zion. Volumes 1 and 2, as reprinted in Out-of-Print Classics, Volume 6, Sacred Music Press, 1954.

[52] Text not included in this service in Mannheimer's siddur; instructed to turn back to page 30 where text is included in a shacharit service.

[53] Text also not included for this Psalm; on page 30 with the previous psalm.

	Mi Chamocha B'shem Chanukah (1 setting)
Malchut'cha	Malchut'cha (1 setting)
	Adonai Yimloch (2 settings)
V'ne'emar	V'ne'emar (1 setting)
Hashkiveinu (p.109)	Hashkiveinu (1 setting)
	U'v'tzeil K'nafecha (1 setting)
	Ki Eil Shomreinu (1 setting)
V'sham'ru	V'sham'ru (1 setting)
	Chatzi Kaddish (4 settings; divided)
Avot (p.112)[54]
G'vurot[55]
Ata Kadosh
Ata Kidashta et Yom Hashvi'i
Vay'chulu
Eloheinu Veilohei Avoteinu (p.113)
R'tzei[56]
Modim Anachnu Lach (p.114)
Shalom Rav
Vay'chulu (p.115)[57]	Vay'chulu (1 setting)
Mein Sheva	Magein Avot (1 setting)
Kaddish Shalem[58]
Bameh Madlikin (p.116)[59]
Kiddush (p.117)	Kiddush (1 setting)
Aleinu (p.119)[60]	Va'anach'nu Kor'im (1 setting)
	Bayom Hahu (1 setting)
Kaddish Yatom
Adon Olam	Adon Olam (6 settings)

What do we learn from this chart? First, we see that Sulzer did not write any compositions for the first six psalms—95, 96, 97, 98, 99, and 29—of the Kabbalat Shabbat service. There could be a number of reasons for this. I believe that Sulzer was shying away from traditional hazzanut in this first volume of Schir Zion because he felt 54 No German translation given.

---

55 No German translation given.
56 No German translation given from R'tzei to Shalom Rav.
57 No German translation given.
58 No text is included for Kaddish Shalem, merely an instruction to recite it.
59 No German translation given.
60 In a similar fashion to Kaddish Shalem, no text is included for Aleinu, Kaddish Yatom, or Adon Olam; just instructions to recite each prayer.

unequipped to handle its difficulties at this point in his career. He may have been unable to conceptualize the psalms in anything other than the nusach in which they had been passed down to him. At the same time, he might have been focusing his efforts exlusively on L'cha Dodi, which he wrote numerous settings for, and for which he chose as "the star" of his Kabbalat Shabbat service.

Yet Sulzer did not write settings for each and every verse of L'cha Dodi, despite his seeming obsession with other particular verses for which he wrote six different settings. As he moved further into the Kabbalat Shabbat service, he chose to break up pieces of liturgy, which were meant to be considered as a whole, such as in Mizmor Shir L'yom Hashabbat. At the end of Kabbalat Shabbat, Sulzer skipped over the psalm verses in fragments and small liturgical elements that Mannheimer includes (psalm fragments that follow Psalm 93, including 134; 46:8/46:12; 84:13; 20:10), and focused on what one might consider the core building blocks of the service. This important idea of identifying key texts within lengthy liturgical selections is one that defines Reform Judaism down to our day.

For the first half of Arvit L'Shabbat, Sulzer was very much involved in writing music to augment the service, from Bar'chu to the Chatzi Kaddish. He chose not to tamper with the minhag for selections such as the V'ahavta (already likely being chanted to Torah trope) and Emet V'Emunah. However, his selections for Ma'ariv Aravim and the like are only written for the chatimot (closing lines), showing that he modeled them after nusach, even if, in the end, they appeared as choral, a cappella selections. Unlike his L'cha Dodi section, Sulzer usually kept the number of selections to 1 or 2 for each piece. This might imply that, for him, for the main section of the service, there is still a Mi-Sinai way of doing thing—a way that comes from God that is untouchable.

For the Amidah, Sulzer keeps silent, as is appropriate in the German tradition of the day. He resumed composing for the Vay'chulu and Mein Sheva. Sulzer composes nothing for the Kaddish Shalem, which is interesting, as he did compose something for the responses of the Chatzi Kaddish. There is something about the Mi-Sinai melody of Kaddish Shalem, though, that signifies that it is the end of the service in the ears of the congregation, and perhaps that was something that Sulzer did not want to tamper with in any way. He did write a Kiddush, some elements of the Aleinu, and six settings of Adon Olam. All in all, both volumes of Schir Zion contain an enormous amount of repertoire, able to keep a congregation content week in and week out with both with its variety and its depth. Sulzer could proudly declaim that he had created a complete musical service with choices for each liturgical selection to meet the needs of even contemporary Jewry.

This brief analysis of the contents in Schir Zion I and II enables us to reflect more closely on the words of Geoffrey Goldberg and Michael Meyer – Sulzer never meant to be a "reformer." We can see this in his approach to his compositions. He attempted to make them current while maintaining their sense of traditionalism. Sulzer was very much like Geiger and Joël and Mannheimer. He did not want to splinter from the precious community that he felt was his sacred obligation to serve.

Early in his life, Sulzer was engaged in experimentation, though within the boundaries of traditionalism. As the external forces – including the Haskala, his artistic friends in Vienna, and his German-Jewish community that sought grandeur alongside tradition – made themselves felt, he adapted his approach. Throughout his life, he would remain rooted in traditional melodies, nusach handed down throughout the centuries. Sulzer might have harmonized these melodies in a way more melodious to the modern ear, but he remained true to his Jewish roots.

What for Sulzer was the perfect balance between tradition and innovation? A deeper analysis of specific compositions by Salomon Sulzer written over the course of his lifetime will help us answer this question. In so doing, we can try to discern his techniques and more fully appreciate how he re-aligned this balance at different points in his compositional career.

Chapter Four
An Analysis of Musical Examples

Twenty-five years lapsed between the publication of Sulzer's two volumes of Schir Zion. We can assume that, since Sulzer began his compositional activities long before he arrived in Vienna, he was composing for at least 14 years before Volume I was published, and then approximately 15 years before the arrival of Volume II. We reflect on this because scholars have outlined these two periods to be markedly different in terms of the character of their creative output. The first was of a classical style; the second, more traditional and modal in character.

These explanations, however, merely provide a overview to Sulzer's work. They fail to give credit to the nuances in his compositions, or the broad scope of each of the volumes. In fact, Sulzer might be overwhelmingly classical in the first volume, but this is not to say that he did not use traditional melodies. He might have harmonized them in a classical way, but the use of tradition cannot be discounted. The second volume has similar contradictions. Thus, we will look at three pieces – "Adon Olom" from Schir Zion I, "B'rosch Haschonoh" from the same volume, and a three-piece "M'ein Sheva" set from Schir Zion II. In analyzing these, we hope to gain a clearer sense of Sulzer's progression from a young musician to a mature composer, and then, we will be able to draw more accurate conclusions about Sulzer's legacy of both tradition and reform.

Adon Olom[61]

Sulzer composed many settings of "Adon Olom" throughout the course of his career. Six total appear in both Volumes I and II of Schir Zion, although one is by another composer. The particular "Adon Olom" from Volume I that I present for analysis becomes our focal point because it is a four-part, choral, a cappella work in waltz time that is typical of both German-Protestant hymns and the Classical era of music. It is typical of the classicist style for which Sulzer is known for in this first volume of his masterpiece.

This example is in Eb Major, and it is simple in both form and harmony. Perhaps this is because the poetry of the liturgical text is basic, and Sulzer finds that simplicity is the best way to musically accompany these words that close the Shabbat Ma'ariv service. The text and translation, with an outline of the form, follow:

(1) Adon olom ascher moloch|	Master of the universe,
(2) B'terem col j'zir nivro.|	Who reigned before any form was created,
(3) Lees naasoh b'chefzo kol|	At the time when His will brought all into being-
(4) Asaj melech sch'mo nikro.|	then as 'King' was His name proclaimed.
(5) V'achare kich'los (kich'los) haccol|	After all has ceased to be,
(6) L'waddo jimloch (jimloch) noro.|	He, the Awesome One, will reign alone.
(7) W'hu hojo w'hu howeh|	It is He Who was, He Who is,
(8) W'hu jihejeh b'siforoh.|	and He Who will remain in splendor.[62]

[61] Music for "Adon Olom" can be found on page 90 of the appendix.

[62] Translation from The Complete Artscroll Siddur, Rabbi Nosson Scherman, ed. New York: Mesorah Publications, 1984, page 13.
The transliteration given in this chapter is found in the original publication and

As is evident from the outline above, there are eight, four-bar phrases in the entire piece. Essentially, the piece consists of two musical periods – from phrase one to four is one period, and from five to eight is the second. These two periods are quite similar, despite minor changes in rhythmic elements that derive from an attempt to set the Hebrew as clearly and accurately as possible.

A harmonic analysis of the piece uncovers the fact that phrases one and five, two and six, three and seven, and four and eight are essentially equal. We only need to determine what is occurring in the first four phrases, or first 16 measures, then, to analyze the thrust of the piece.[63]

The first two phrases are simple, and ultimately, clear expressions of classicism. The opening phrase is a succession. It is in Eb Major, moves from I-V7-V7-I. No significant harmonic motion occurs in this phrase; the tonic and dominant are emphasized. But Sulzer sticks to standard classical harmonies, and establishes the classical nature of the piece from its very outset. Phrase two is a progression to the V chord, indicating a half cadence is present. Harmonically, it moves from IV-ii-I-V. Again, we are presented with classical harmonies and standard harmonic progressions.

The phrase of interest among this first period is phrase three, as it shows use of the secondary dominant. It is essentially written in Bb Major, the V of Eb, and in this represents the German Ashkenazic tradition typical of nineteenth-century Viennese Jewry.

---

[63] Since the piece is in ¾ time, the strong accent is on the first two beats of the measure. The third beat, then, functions as a pick-up to whatever might be occurring in the following measure. Harmonically, this means that the action takes place during the course of those first two beats, and the analysis presented focuses on those first two beats in presenting the harmonic structure of the entire measure.

modulation, simple harmonies on the I and V chords are used. But when we consider this to be the key change that it is, the degree of harmonic difficulty that the phrase presents ultimately rises. However, this was a traditional harmonic move in the classical world, typical of Mozart. Secondary dominants were commonly used for interest and complexity, and Sulzer employs this same move, demonstrating his allegiance with the classicist world in which he lived.

Phrase four, the final phrase in the period, ultimately moves this first period towards the perfect authentic cadence that is so typical of classical music. The four measures progress as follows: I-IV-[I 6/4-V7]-I. We return to the Eb Major that opened the first phrase of the piece, and move through simple harmonies to reach the conclusion that music of this sort desires.

As the second period is strikingly similar to the first, no analysis is needed. It follows along the same harmonic outline, with the four phrases functioning as equals to the first four phrases presented in the piece. Despite the minor rhythmic changes, then, the piece almost appears to be a short version of a strophic form. Its form is clearly A A.

Harmonically, when looking at the overall thrust of the piece, it becomes clear that Sulzer stayed firmly rooted in both the I and V chords of Eb Major, displaying an emphasis on both the tonic and the dominant and his preclusion for classicism. The secondary dominant chord is an attempt at a more complex harmonic approach to this seemingly simple piece of music. But, this move was standard in classical music, employed frequently by Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven.

This "Adon Olom" is both clear-cut and straightforward. It is classical in every element of its construction. It gives us evidence of Sulzer's thorough alliance with the principles of music that surrounded him in his day in Vienna. It is the quintessential example of what the scholars see as the dominant style of composition in this first volume of Schir Zion.

But, I would argue that this "Adon Olom" is not only evidence of classicism. When the first verse, "W'hu Echod," is examined, we can see a stray from classical tendencies in both harmony and style.[64] Its style is one-hundred percent consistent with that of cantorial recitative, even with the nice and even fit of the recitative passage in 4/4 time. There is even a hint of the Hashem Malach mode that is demonstrated in the use of the flatted seventh scale degree. We can see, then, that Sulzer is not as transparent as scholars might think. Even in this basic piece, he pushes himself to bring in elements of traditional Jewish music. It is worthwhile to consider his use of time signature and key in these moments, as they are evidence that Sulzer is being pulled towards modernity. But considering his acts of reform in just this piece alone, it is interesting to note that he cannot seem to divorce himself entirely from the tradition that precedes him.

What defines this "Adon Olom," then? It is a classical jewel in a new Jewish style that defined Sulzer's early work and started a revolution of synagogue music. But, it cannot be emphasized enough that moments within it shine with the light of tradition, showing that Schir Zion I might be more complicated than originally anticipated.

---

[64] The music for W'hu Echod can be found on page 90 of the appendix.

B'rosch Haschonoh[65]

"B'rosch Haschonoh" is one of the most famous liturgical moments from the Rosh Hashana service. "On Rosh Hashana it is written, and on Yom Kippur it is sealed, who shall live and who shall die," its text powerfully cries out. It is dramatic and poignant, and serves for many as the wake-up call to recount the deeds of the past year and repent for sinful ways, in fear of what might happen should one incur the wrath of God.

Sulzer is intelligent in his approach to this piece because, although composed for Schir Zion I, the piece is traditional and uses choral accompaniment by a male choir as its only hint at modernity. It is a modal cantorial recitative. It is almost anti-classicist, and refutes the notion that Sulzer was overly classical in this first volume of his work.

The piece is composed in a combination of Bb Magein Avot (or natural minor) and Bb Ahava Raba. It begins quite simply, with the choir in unison on a simple melody that serves to emphasize the first, third, fourth, and fifth scale degrees. This choral opening feels very open in its tonality, allowing the listener to imagine multiple possibilities for the true harmonic destination of the piece. On the very first cantorial melodic phrase, though – "B'rosch haschonoh jikosewun uw'jom zom kippur j'chosemun" – Sulzer emphasizes the minor tonality (Magein Avot). The cantorial melody, while primarily unaccompanied, highlights the fifth, third, second, and first scale degrees. There is a raised sixth scale degree, which flirts with the harmonic minor (as opposed to the natural minor which the Magein Avot scale suggests), but this feature is used just once for the sake of interest. The choral accompaniment focuses on the i chord and the III chord in the first instance ("kippur"), and for "j'chosemun," it follows the progression i-diminished ii-i-Major V. This major V chord is important because it deviates from Magein Avot yet again, and appropriately signals an upcoming change in key. The key, while uncertain, does change to the relative major, D Major, for a moment on the words "ja'avrun, w'chomoh," but quickly transitions from this key back to the Bb Magein Avot for one final moment on "jibore'un."

[65] The music for B'rosch Haschonoh can be found on pages 91-92 of the appendix.

The use of Magein Avot in the first portion of this setting of "B'rosch Haschonoh" shows Sulzer's expert use of the didactic and instructive qualities of the mode. But, the section flirts with a tonality that is both present in classical and Jewish modal music. Sulzer could be emphasizing his grounding in either world with this technique. His clear intentions are quickly discovered as soon as the liturgical text begins listing the various ways in which we as humans can die. It is at this moment when Sulzer begins his move towards Bb Ahava Raba, one of the most uniquely Jewish modes in its sound.

The phrase "mi jichjeh" is firmly rooted in the tonic Bb, but its augmented interval , characteristic of the new mode, lies in the incorrect place. Instead of being between the third and fourth scale degrees, Sulzer first flirts with Ahava Raba by giving us an augmented interval between the second and third scale degrees. He follows this with an indiscriminate response by the choir of the same words on an open chord – Bb and F. The lack of the third of the chord tells us that Sulzer has not yet committed to either Ahava Raba or Magein Avot. He quickly commits, though, and on the following phrase, "mi jomus," he emphasizes the interval of Db-E natural. This definitively outlines the Bb Ahava Raba scale that Sulzer has been transitioning to for at least six measures.

Sulzer then engages in a call and response between choir and cantor, beginning with the choir, on "mi wekizo umi lo w'kizo, mi wamajim umi woesch." The focus of the male ensemble is on highlighting the dominant, while the cantor remains prominently grounded in the second scale degree, emphasizing Sulzer's desire to leave the phrase unresolved. In these phrases, we also see the first use of the raised seventh scale degree which is also a feature of the Ahava Raba scale.

We reach a climax of sorts on "mi wacherew umi wachajoh," as we find both cantor and choir singing together, beginning quite softly and building gradually and yet dramatically. Harmonically, the intention seems to be to continue the lack of resolution prevalent in the previous phrase. However, this lack of resolution quickly dissipates in the following phrase, "mi woroow umi wazomo." With a brummstimmen (hummed) accompaniment by the choir, the cantor's melody centers around the raised fourth scale degree and the tonic. "Mi woraasch," the phrase that follows, uses a bit of coloratura singing, as does the "umi woesch" phrase several measures back, to highlight the dramatic content of the words. "Mi woraasch" also clearly begins on the tonic and ends on the dominant, preparing us for yet another key change.

The key actually does not settle during the last six measures of the piece until the very last chord. The "umi" that follows "mi woraasch" is the last moment of Bb Ahava Raba in the piece, and because it only utilizes the third, second, and first scale degrees, it could be indicative of either Ahava Raba or a return to Magein Avot. A D-natural is used in the next phrase, "umi wamagefoh," constructing a major tonic triad for the first time in the piece. Then, a Cb is used on the cadence of that phrase and again in the phrase that follows ("mi wachanikoh"), which signals the upcoming resolution. Finally, the harmonic indecision resolves on the last chord, where a Bb Major triad is used. This is clearly a sign of the times. Sulzer does what he feels in right in harmonizing this concluding moment, as he does throughout his compositions.

While this piece is clear evidence of Sulzer's ability to honor tradition over modernity, the final moment of the piece shows that he is in conflict between the two. The balance is, this time, emphasizing traditional modes and styles, and modernity certainly loses out, but the strong pull towards the sentiments of the modern ear push Sulzer to end the piece in a way that is almost startling. He would never desecrate this sacred text in an attempt to make it too modern, but Sulzer has clearly been trained as a classicist, and cannot do completely without his classical sensibilities for the final chord. It is important to remember that Sulzer might be preparing his listener for the next piece to come with such a modulation, but this still does not discount the almost abrupt way in which he accomplishes this. We see here Sulzer's struggle with the balance between tradition and modernity, and as of yet, it is still unclear as to where his allegiances lay.

Way'chulu*[66]

Next, we turn to Sulzer's "Waj'chulu," a three-section piece including the text of the M'ein Sheva, an important repetition of the Amidah said on Erev Shabbat services. It is found in Sulzer's Schir Zion II, published in 1865, but one must keep in mind that he could have composed it at any time after the publishing of the first volume in 1840. Although the "Waj'chulu" paragraph is a part of the Amidah itself, it is included in the liturgy at this point to ensure that it is still said on Festivals that fall on Shabbat, when the paragraph is not davened silently as a part of the Amidah. The entire M'ein Sheva section has the purpose of forcing the congregation to stay in synagogue a little longer in case a congregant takes a long time to daven the Ma'ariv service, as in earlier times, it was dangerous to walk home alone in the dark.[67] This extra prayer was intended to be a synopsis of the blessings found in the Amidah, or Shmoneh Esrei—from 18 total down to seven, as a whole meant to capture the essence of the Amidah's sentiments.

[66] The music for Way'chulu can be found on pages 93-94 in the appendix.

The text that Sulzer used was true to the traditional rendering of the prayer in siddurim of the time. As Sulzer is inventive with the way he breaks up phrases using rests and the way he structures the sections as a whole, it is essential to have an understanding of the text's meaning in order to analyze why he made the choices that he did.

(Waj'chulu)
Waj'chulu haschomajim w'ho-orez	Thus the heaven and the earth were finished,
W'chol z'wo'om.	and all their multitude.
Waj'chal elohim bajjom hasch'vi-i	On the seventh day God completed
M'lachto ascher osoh,	His work which He had done,
Wajjischbos bajjom hasch'vi-i	and He abstained on the seventh day
Miccol m'lachto ascher osoh.	from all His work which He had done.
Waj'vorech elohim es jom hasch'vi-i	God blessed the seventh day
Wajj'kaddesch oso,	and sanctified it,
Ki vo schovas miccol m'lachto	because on it He had abstained from all His work
Ascher boro elohim la'asos.	which God created to make.
Boruch attoh adonoj,	Blessed are You, Adonai,
(Boruch hu oworuch sch'mo)	(Blessed is Adonai and blessed be His name)
Elohenu we'elohe avosenu,	our God and God of our forefathers,
Elohe Awrohom, elohei Yizchok,	God of Abraham, God of Isaac,
We'elohe Ja'akow,	and God of Jacob,
Ho-el haggodol haggibor w'hannoro	the great, mighty, and awesome God,
El eljon, koneh schomajim wo-orez.	the supreme God, Creator of heaven

[67] The Complete Artscroll Siddur, p.346.

	and earth.
(Mogein Avos)
Mogen ovos bid'voro	He Who was the shield of our forefathers with His word,
M'chajjeh mesim b'ma'amoro.	Who resuscitates the dead with His utterance,
Hoel hakkodosch sche'en comohu	the Holy God Who is unequalled,
Hammeniach l'ammo	Who grants rest to His people
B'jom schabbas kodscho.	on His holy Sabbath day,
Ki vom rozoh l'honiach lohem	for He was pleased with them to grant them rest.
L'fonow na'avod b'jiroh wofachad	Before Him we will serve with awe and dread
W'nodeh lisch'mo b'chol jom tomid	and give thanks to His Name every day
Me'en habbrochos.	continually with appropriate blessings.
El hahodo'os, adon hascholom,	God of grateful praise, Master of peace,
M'kaddesch haschabbos	Who sanctifies the Sabbath
Um'vorech sch'vi-i	and blesses the seventh day,
Umeniach bik'duschoh	and gives rest with his holiness
L'am m'dusch'ne oneg.	to a people saturated with delight--
Secher l'ma'aseh w'reschis.	in memory of the work of Creation.
(Elohenu We'elohe Avoseinu)
Elohenu we'elohe avosenu	Our God and the God of our forefathers
Rezeh wim'nuchosenu.	may You be pleased with our rest.
Kad'schenu b'mizwosecho,	Sanctify us with Your commandments
W'sen chelkenu b'sorosecho,	and grant us our share in Your Torah;
Sab'enu mituwecho	satisfy us from Your goodness
W'sam'chenu bischu-o-secho	and gladden us with Your salvation,
W'taher libenu l'owdecho be'emes	and purify our hearts to serve You sincerely.
W'hanchilenu adonoj elohenu,	O Adonai, our God,
Be'ahawoh uwrozon schabbas kod'schecho	with love and favor grant us Your holy Sabbath as a heritage
W'jonuchu woh jisroel m'kad'sche sch'mecho.	and may Israel, the sanctifiers of Your name, rest on it.
Boruch attoh adonoj	Blessed are You, Adonai,
(Boruch hu uvoruch sch'mo)	(Blessed is Adonai and blessed be His name)
M'kaddesch haschabbos. (Omen)	Who sanctifies the Sabbath. (Amen)

This three part piece, "Way'chulu," "Mogen Ovos," and "Elohenu We'elohe Avosenu," is rooted in E natural minor, or Magein Avot. The first and third sections, unaccompanied recitatives, are sandwiched around a choral section (SATB), which is also unaccompanied. The nusach is very straightforward, and is reminiscent of the typical sound of the Shabbat eve service, which is known to be quite modal.[68]

The first section, "Way'chulu," moves between the minor and the relative major continuously, and this move is employed broadly throughout all three sections of the piece. The first of these moves from minor to major occurs on the words "waj'chal elohim," and this phrase, following several beats of the E minor tonality that Sulzer establishes at the beginning, sets a pattern that is used for the remainder of the piece. The melodic line moves back to minor on "wajjischbos bajjom," and then back again to major for the next phrase ("waj'vorech elohim"). It is important to note that this move is typical of Erev Shabbat nusach and music written in the Magein Avot mode, demonstrating Sulzer's adherence to the past and traditional practices of this kind of hazzanut. This consistent moving back and forth between the two relative tonalities creates a traditional mood of Shabbat, albeit in a modern setting.

After the pattern outlined above is established, Sulzer briefly changes the mode to something not yet heard. Through use of accidentals (C# and D#), included in the optional ornament on the phrase "ki vo schovas," he establishes a harmonic minor-sounding scale, with a sharp sixth and leading tone. This is the first moment within the piece that we are privy to Sulzer's Western musical style, and we begin to doubt his desire to adhere completely to the tradition of nusach that has been passed down to him. However, it is important to emphasize that these ornaments are optional, and one could easily sing the piece authentically by simply staying on the tonic, E', thus, giving no indication of any Western modal flavor. This is consistent with other cantorial music of this era.

---

[68] In regards to its relationship with traditional nusach, Sulzer has a style that is at times reminiscent of Israel Alter's use of mode and simplistic melody rooted in the tonic triad of the major scale, ornamented at moments, and moving to other modalities at other times as a means of emphasis.

At this moment of the piece where a definitive modal flavor is presented, we are encountered with the notion of how one actually should hear harmony in a piece with no accompaniment. The overall harmony and cadences of this section of the piece themselves can be heard in different ways, and are certainly subject to interpretation. They could be modal cadences and harmonies, but Sulzer gives us no indication as to the truth of this statement. This shows us how Sulzer stood at the crossroads of Jewish music. We might be clearer on Sulzer's intent if he had given us more accidentals—for example, a D# that would be indicative of the harmonic minor in E minor—but, he does not do so except in one optional moment of the section. We are left, then, to our own Jewish musical backgrounds and aural training to guide us in our interpretation.

In regards to the overall setting of the Hebrew, Sulzer does quite well, considering the Hebrew diction of his day. In the first few lines of music, we can see Sulzer's use of the accented syllable which clearly differs from our modern, Sephardic sensibilities. Accenting syllables for the sake of the melodic integrity of the line was a common feature among Jewish and non-Jewish composers of music with Hebrew texts, and demonstrates how different their pronunciation might have been from ours.

Sulzer's musical setting of the text is appropriate to the sentiments of the liturgy. On the word "heavens," he ornaments the phrase elaborately, opening the listener up to the vastness of the skies with this detailed melody. Following this, his setting of the word

"earth" is much more simplistic and hardly ornamented, providing a distinction between the dwelling place of God and the humble ground of humankind below. Sulzer uses this ornamentation technique sparingly throughout the section, maintaining a close relationship with the fifth, third, and tonic. This keeps the melodic line relatively simple, allowing the ornamented moments to speak volumes about the text.

As these ornaments seem to define the melody in a way that, without them, we are left with unclear answers, it is important to look at the moments in which Sulzer included these ornaments and, perhaps, look at why he might have done so. We have already discussed the ornament on "schomajim" (line 1), which is not given as optional and keeps the hazzan rooted in the E natural minor scale. The next ornament, on "w'chol," is optional, and clearly is in the minor mode as well, and it speaks of all of God's creation, the expanse of which is likely what warranted the intricate ornament. Following this, we have two lines of ornament-free melody before reaching the ornamented "hasch'vi'i," stating in the relative major mode the importance of this seventh day of creation. The last prominent, coloratura ornament in this section is the one we have just discussed —"schovas"—meaning "rest." It is interesting that, instead of returning to the calming minor mode of the start of the piece to imitate this rest, Sulzer employs the harmonic minor, giving a completely different, jarring flavor to the melodic line as a whole. It is understandable that he wants to highlight this notion of rest, but to do it in such a harsh manner in comparison with the base tonality of the piece seems to be a strange choice.

After ending the phrase "ascher boro elohim la'asos" prominently in the original minor mode, Sulzer proclaims dramatically in the relative major the words "boruch attoh adonoj" beginning on the third of that mode, heightening the attention of the listener, as this is the first time he has begun on anything but the tonic in the major. He follows this with a simple four-part G major chord for the first entrance of the chorus on "boruch hu oworuch sch'mo," before returning to the remainder of the chatima.

It has already been mentioned that it is typical of Erev Shabbat liturgy to compose in the minor mode. More specifically, though, this Avot prayer that is typically in the minor mode while drawing on the Three Festival motif. A clear moment of Sulzer's adherence to this traditional rule comes at the end of this first section, on the words "we'elohe ja'akow." This flourish on "we'elohe" is almost identical to the opening Ma'ariv Bar'chu of the Three Festivals. Again, we are given evidence that Sulzer's adherence to tradition seems to be exceedingly more important than his intent to Westernize, at least in this piece.

Next, we enter the "Mogen Avos" section, which has already been outlined as an SATB choral arrangement. However, it, like its predecessor and the section that follows, is unaccompanied. While it was difficult to ascertain the harmonic structure of the melody in the first section of unaccompanied solo written for cantor, this middle section repeats the harmonic outline from the first section quite clearly, and in it, we see the same move from E minor to its relative G major, reaffirming our analysis of the opening section. However, although it is "choral," we can see in Sulzer's structure of this section (tenor and bass in unison followed by a shorter choral response phrase, repeated throughout) that he was not intending on being overly obvious about these harmonies, just as he was not obvious in the "Way'chulu" section.

This second section begins with a lengthy tenor/bass unison section set in the natural minor, the same key that began our piece at "Way'chulu." At "hakkodosch sche'en comohu," Sulzer moves again to the major, highlighting his typical minor-major move. The next phrase flirts with the major, and then moves to a resolution on the second scale degree, F#, leading us into the brief four-part choral section. This choral section is clearly in the major, although it is not a pure one. It contains an A# (second scale degree) and C# (fourth scale degree), creating an altered G Major scale that appears as such—G, A#, B, C#, D, E, F#. The one and a half steps between the first and second scale degree and the full whole step between the third and fourth scale degree are unique, but Sulzer does not keep them in play for long. As the phrase rises, he uses the altered major scale, and as the phrase comes down to resolution, the pure major scale returns. The C# is the more predictable of the two; the A# is quite strange and is perhaps a sign of Sulzer's Westernness, just as the C# and D# were evidence as such in the ornamented phrase in "Way'chulu." It is likely that this A# was simply used as a dramatic ascent, as it highlights the English translation, "for He was pleased with them to grant them rest."

Then, the tenors and basses return in unison again, and also in the natural minor. The choral entrance on "el hahodo'os" moves to a major-sounding mode, and "adon hascholom" reiterates this questioning type of phrase but, instead, in the minor mode. It is colored by the D# of the harmonic minor scale, though, making it a distinctive cadence with which to return to the tenor/bass unison. This next unison phrase ends on an E which then ascends to an F#, and this is quite a deceptive cadence, as it leads us to believe that the resolution will be a minor one rooted in the tonic, until we hear the second scale degree as Sulzer's true conclusion (or lack thereof) of the phrase. Next, we have the last bit of choral singing to end this section of the piece, and Sulzer's choice in handling this is to give his listener a standard 7-1 chordal resolution. With this, he stays in the mode. He gives no Western flavor to the final cadence. So, with two-thirds of the piece completed, we only have two moments of Westernness, showing Sulzer's true loyalty to traditionalism and the modal system of Jewish music.

Finally, we turn to the last section, "Elohenu We'elohe Avosenu." Throughout this section, as in the others, Sulzer reinforces his allegiance to the minor mode that is so typical of this Erev Shabbat liturgy. Thus, we can almost call this section A', as, although the text is different, the harmonic concept seems to be same as in the very first section (A). In fact, since the harmonic concept is the same throughout, it might be useful to label the structure of the piece as A A' A''. But, the choral responses that interrupt the clean switch between the minor and major modes make this model debatable, possibly leading an analyst to see the piece as A B A'. The crucial element in deciding upon the form is determining whether one sees the harmonic structure as the one element that controls the unity of the entire piece. As one might tend to take more elements than just harmony into consideration when analyzing the structure, the A B A' model might be more appropriate.

This section, like the others, adheres to the strict natural minor/major model, except in one moment. On the word "w'sam'chenu" (and gladden us with your salvation), Sulzer uses the C#, the fourth scale degree in this G major section. This seems exceptionally appropriate considering the exuberant mood of the word, and distinguishes it as Sulzer's vision of God's primary purpose on this Sabbath day of rest.

Amidst these minor-major transitions that fill the section (and the piece), the composer reaches a high point on "w'taher libenu"—beginning on the fifth, and ascending to the octave. He then travels down to the seventh scale degree to prepare for a reach up to the high G (third scale degree), which then floats back down to the tonic (although an octave above the original tonic). The resulting melody is intoxicating —"and purify our hearts to serve You in truth." It is perhaps the most precious moment of the entire piece, where Sulzer conveys his highest moment of Sabbath bliss.

At the very end of the piece, the beginning section of the chatima is in the minor mode, with a unison choral response on the fifth. The "m'kaddesch haschabbos" that follows focuses on the fourth, fifth, and tonic, but ends on the fifth, with a choral unison "Omen" on the fifth as well. While Sulzer has flirted with Western musical traits a bit throughout, he clearly wants to leave the listener with the sense that the tonality is not securely established as the piece concludes. One who would want to hear Western harmonies accompanying this final moment can do so, while one who wants to believe that Sulzer has written a traditional piece of nusach (which, in all likelihood, he truly has) is perfectly free to do this as well. Again, as Sulzer finds himself at the crossroads of Jewish musical life residing in Vienna in the nineteenth century, he probably finds himself pulled in two directions. He takes the easy way out by not securing himself to either path in this duplicitous of endings.

One of most interesting things about this is that, although his moves are predictable, as a Western composer—a modern Jew immersed in traditional nusach but influenced by the modern era—he does not go where one thinks he would go, which is to compose the piece in a modern Western minor key. As a whole, it is clearly modal, and it is clear that Sulzer wants to maintain the modality of the music as much as possible. Although he has moments of Westernness, at least from the analysis of this piece, it is evident that Sulzer maintained strong ties to tradition—to orthodox nusach—and that his reforms are minor. This might be because he is stepping onto new frontiers and does not want to tilt the scales too much in either direction. We must keep in mind that, as this was published in Schir Zion II and not Schir Zion I, that this was not Sulzer's earliest piece. He had composed many pieces prior to this one, certainly had experimented with modernity, and perhaps decided that the future of Jewish music lay in a return to tradition.

Upon conclusion of our analysis, it becomes clear that Sulzer fought with the notion of balance throughout his life. Each piece presented demonstrates a preference for either modernity or tradition, but none falls along the clear lines that should delineate these preferences. Thus, it is difficult to agree with scholars who call Sulzer's early period as "classical" and his later one as "oriental." "Adon Olom" is the perfect example of Sulzer as a classicist, and yet it contains elements of traditionalism in the verses with the use of cantorial recitative. "B'rosch Haschonoh" should be another example of classicism because of its compositional date, and yet it is incredibly modal and traditional. The M'ein Sheva suite is a traditional example of recitative, and yet its inclusion of certain Western techniques makes it indistinguishable as either modern or traditional.

Sulzer was evidently stuck in what we can consider to be the greatest conflict of his time. Enlightenment and Haskala ideals were easily understandable at face value, and yet they created conflict in the traditional soul that was beyond comprehension. Sulzer struggled to understand, and this struggle is painted boldly in his work. Sulzer must have felt a strong urge to make his music as grand and significant as the music of Vienna that surrounded him. But, his deep desire to not break up his community placed him in the midst of a lifelong struggle.

Sulzer clearly experimented with staying in each of the camps in which he aligned himself, as "Adon Olom" is an exercise in classicism and "B'rosch Haschonoh" and "M'ein Sheva" are clear attempts at traditionalism. Those experiments failed, though, in the sense that the works analyzed here are indicative of a muddy approach. The harmonies, the settings of the text, the time signatures used – all elements show that Sulzer was battling with two approaches that he saw as valid. When one looks at his works as a whole, considering the elements of their individual parts, it becomes clear that neither approach definitively won for Salomon Sulzer. He merely let the battle rage on, and the varied and vast compositions that resulted from this battle are evidence that grounding in two different styles can surely result in stunning creativity and the beginning of a revolution that has changed the face of Jewish music forever. He provided the model upon which hundreds of his followers built their own approaches, and it is in this way that we feel the great impact of Sulzer's contributions even today.

Conclusion
The Legacy of Sulzer's Life and Music

Sulzer once wrote, "It was the intention of the misbegotten experiments of Hamburg and Berlin to reduce the entire service to a German song before and after the sermon."[69] Can we imagine a Reform Jewish service today with music limited to these two moments? How absurd this would seem to our ears, trained to hear melodies throughout worship. The simple Protestant ideal is in no way characteristic of Reform. Even early on, as demonstrated on the pages of Schir Zion, music could meander through worship, enhancing nearly all rubrics of the service.

Sulzer's work is tremendously complex and shows that simplicity was only one path open to Reform Jews. Sulzer had no thought of reducing a congregation's intellectual capacity by providing only simple, four-part hymns. He pushed communities to think about their prayers and used the context of the melodies to do so. Rather than relying exclusively on traditional tunes, which had become rote to the congregation, and rather than limiting himself to the strict simplicity of classicism, which might have limited his music to the realm of secularism, he ingeniously combined the two. Herein lay the power of his work – the creation of an entirely new genre that was brilliant both to the mind and to the ear.

I argue that Sulzer was not an imitator in any respect. He drew from the world around him and infused his music with knowledge gained by his stellar musical training and his Jewish sense of the necessary components to communicate with God.

---

[69] Eric Werner, A Voice Still Heard...The Sacred Songs of the Ashkenazic Jews, p.211.

I do not believe that he was an assimilationist. He held true to his tradition throughout his life while bringing to it the best that the wider would could offer. He did so at the service of his people and his God: to elevate the prayer experience of the worshipper and to bring the Jews closer to their Creator. Is a steadfast Jew who embraces modernity one who assimilates?

We liberal Jews ask ourselves this question today. Can we be Jewish and modern at the same time? I think that if one holds true to her or her religion above all, then one can accomplish this without assimilation. Sulzer certainly accomplished this.

In many ways, Sulzer ascribed equal valence to Jewish tradition and the modern musical aesthetic. Schir Zion is a living example of this creative balance. I believe, taken together, the two volumes are the ultimate expression of who Sulzer was as a composer and a cantor: a composer of deep Jewish intensity coupled with lyrical, classical melodies.

Sulzer was a deeply religious man who listened to the outpourings of his soul. While the external world played a large role in shaping him as a musician, he never lost sight of who he was as a Jew. His influence has become normative because it speaks to the modern Jews. Sulzer created a timeless, musical resolution to the debate between rationalism and faith.

Sulzer's influence can thus be understood as extending beyond the realm of musicology; it spread to philosophical realms as well. He changed the face of not only music, but the arts and philosophy in general. We owe him a debt of gratitude for so broadly extending our horizons.

Salomon Sulzer initiated a revolution in musical composition among Jews. With him, the art song entered the Jewish world and inspired the likes of Louis Lewandowski, Max Janowski, Charles Davidson, Max Helfman, and Morris Barash, in addition to countless others.

Abraham Joshua Heschel writes in The Vocation of the Cantor that the job of one in the cantorate is "to create the liturgical community, to convert a plurality of praying individuals into a unity of worship."[70] Through their song, Heschel says, cantors must teach that singing is one of the purest acts, when the heavenly is allowed to permeate our own souls and our own world. Heschel beautifully describes the cantorial art in the following description:

> Music gains its religious dimension when ceasing to be satisfied with conveying that which is within the grasp of emotion and imagination. Religious music is an attempt to convey that which is within our reach but beyond our grasp.[71]

Sulzer was the first cantor to envision a musical path to reveal the the innermost depths of people's souls. By combining tradition and modernity, he defied logical, human expression. He believed in something grand, something majestic, something that could truly elevate the soul. Sulzer opened the door for a new tradition – a tradition of modernity – that resonates today in the souls of liberal Jews everywhere.

---

[70] Abraham Joshua Heschel, "The Vocation of the Cantor," The Insecurity of Freedom. Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 1966, reprinted by the American Conference of Cantors, p.243.

[71] Ibid, p.248.

Appendix A—Listing of Musical Selections in Schir Zion

Schir Zion Volume	Page Number	Item Number	Title	Service	Description
SZ I	p.3	No.1	L'choh Dodi	Kabbalat Shabbat	SATB choir with solo selections and baritone solo
SZ I	p.3	No.1	Schomor Wesochor	Kabbalat Shabbat	SATB choir with solo selections and baritone solo
SZ I	p.5	No.1	Mikdasch Melech	Kabbalat Shabbat	SATB choir with solo selections and baritone solo
SZ I	p.6	No.1	Hisoreri	Kabbalat Shabbat	SATB choir with solo selections and baritone solo
SZ I	p.8	No.1	W'hoju Lim'schisoh	Kabbalat Shabbat	SATB choir with solo selections and baritone solo
SZ I	p.10	No.1	Boi W'scholom	Kabbalat Shabbat	SATB choir with solo selections and baritone solo
SZ I	p.12	No.2	L'choh Dodi	Kabbalat Shabbat	up to SATTB with S solo; solo and choral
SZ I	p.12	No.2	Schomor Wesochor	Kabbalat Shabbat	up to SATTB with S solo; solo and choral
SZ I	p.14	No.2	Mikdasch Melech	Kabbalat Shabbat	up to SATTB with S solo; solo and choral
SZ I	p.16	No.2	Hisoreri	Kabbalat Shabbat	up to SATTB with S solo; solo and choral
SZ I	p.17	No.2	W'hoju Limeschisoh	Kabbalat Shabbat	up to SATTB with S solo; solo and choral
SZ I	p.19	No.3	L'choh Dodi	Kabbalat Shabbat	up to SATTBB; solo and choral
SZ I	p.19	No.3	Schomor Wesochor	Kabbalat Shabbat	up to SATTBB; solo and choral
SZ I	p.20	No.3	Mikdasch Melech	Kabbalat Shabbat	up to SATTBB; solo and choral
SZ I	p.22	No.3	Hisoreri	Kabbalat Shabbat	up to SATTBB; solo and choral
SZ I	p.23	No.3	W'hoju Limeschisoh	Kabbalat Shabbat	up to SATTBB; solo and choral
SZ I	p.25	No.3	Boi Wescholom	Kabbalat Shabbat	up to SATTBB; solo and choral
SZ I	p.26	No.4	Mismor Schir L'jom Haschabos, Psalm 92.1.6	Kabbalat Shabbat	T solo, SATB choir
SZ I	p.28	No.5	Mah God'lu, Psalm 92.6.10/W'atoh Morom	Kabbalat Shabbat	T solo, SATB choir
SZ I	p.28	No.6	Tow L'hodos, Psalm	Kabbalat Shabbat	SATB choir with solos

			92.2.10
SZ I	p.32	No.7	Ki Hineh Ojewecho, Psalm 92.10.bis Ende/Zadik Katomor	Kabbalat Shabbat	T solo, SATB choir
SZ I	p.33	No.8	Adonoj Moloch, Psalm 93	Kabbalat Shabbat	SATB choir with solo choir section
SZ I	p.34	No.9	Bor'chu	Arvit L'shabbat	SATB choir with T solo and choral solo section
SZ I	p.35	No.10	Birchot Schema	Arvit L'shabbat	T solo, SATB choir
SZ I	p.35	No.11	Schema Jisroel	Arvit L'shabbat	STTB solo, then STTB choir
SZ I	p.36	No.12	Ani Adonoj Elohechem	Arvit L'shabbat	SATB choir, then T solo
SZ I	p.36	No.13	Mi Chomocho	Arvit L'shabbat	SATB choir
SZ I	p.37	No.13	Adonoj Jimloch	Arvit L'shabbat	SATB choir
SZ I	p.37	No.14	Mi Chomocho (for Chanukah)	Arvit L'shabbat	SATB choir
SZ I	p.37	No.15	Hapores	Arvit L'shabbat	Solo with choral Amen (see 36)
SZ I	p.37	No.16	Kaddisch	Arvit L'shabbat	SATB choir
SZ I	p.38	No.17	Waanachnu Koreim	Arvit L'shabbat	SATB choir with T solo
SZ I	p.38	No.17	Bajom Hahu	Arvit L'shabbat	SATB choir with T solo
SZ I	p.39	No.18	Adon Olom	Arvit L'shabbat	SATB choir with TTBB solo, T solo, also octet (very extensive)
SZ I	p.42	No.19	Adon Olom	Arvit L'shabbat	SATB choir with B solo
SZ I	p.46	No.20	Adon Olom	Arvit L'shabbat	SATTB choir with solos
SZ I	p.49	No.21	Schochen Ad	Shacharit L'shabbat	T solo with TTB choir
SZ I	p.49	No.22	Es Schem Hoel	Shacharit L'shabbat	T solo with SB, then TB choir
SZ I	p.50	No.23	K'duschoh	Shacharit L'shabbat	T solo with SATB choir
SZ I	p.50	No.24	Jimloch	Shacharit L'shabbat	SATB choir
SZ I	p.50	No.25	Modim	Shacharit L'shabbat	SATB choir
SZ I	p.51	No.26	Bircas Kohanim	Shacharit L'shabbat	T solo with SATB choir
SZ I	p.51	No.27	Hodu	Shacharit L'shabbat	TTBB solo, then SATB refrain
SZ I	p.52	No.28	Hodu (for Chanukah), Psalm 118.1.5	Shacharit L'shabbat	SATB choir
SZ I	p.53	No.29	Ono, Psalm 118.25	Shacharit L'shabbat	TTB solo, SAB chorus
SZ I	p.53	No.30	En Komocho	Shacharit L'shabbat	T solo with SATB choir

SZ I	p.55	No.31	Echod Elohenu	Shacharit L'shabbat	TTB, then SATB
SZ I	p.55	No.32	Gad'lu	Shacharit L'shabbat	SATB choir
SZ I	p.55	No.32	L'cho Adonoj Hageduloh	Shacharit L'shabbat	SATB choir
SZ I	p.57	No.33	Mi Scheosoh Nisim	Shacharit L'shabbat	TBB choir with SATB amen
SZ I	p.57	No.34	Jechad'schehu	Shacharit L'shabbat	SATB choir and solos with TTBB solo section
SZ I	p.59	No.35	Aschre	Shacharit L'shabbat	T solo with SAB choir
SZ I	p.59	No.36	J'halelu, Hodo al Erez, Psalm 148.13, 148.14.15	Shacharit L'shabbat	T solo with SATB choir
SZ I	p.60	No.37	Howu Ladonoj, Psalm 29	Shacharit L'shabbat	B solo with SATB choir and solo
SZ I	p.64	No.38	Haschiwenu	Shacharit L'shabbat	SATB choir
SZ I	p.64	No.39	K'duschoh L'musaf	Shacharit L'shabbat	SATTB choir with solos
SZ I	p.68	No.40	Anim Smiros	Shacharit L'shabbat	SATB choir and solo in various permutations
SZ I	p.73	No.41	Mah Towu	Arvit L'yom Tov	SATB choir with solos
SZ I	p.75	No.42	Bor'chu	Arvit L'yom Tov	SATBB choir
SZ I	p.76	No.43	Umaawir Jom	Arvit L'yom Tov	T solo
SZ I	p.76	No.44	Hamaawir Bonow	Arvit L'yom Tov	T solo, then SATBB choir
SZ I	p.76	No.45	Mi Chomocho	Arvit L'yom Tov	SATB choir with solos
SZ I	p.78	No.46	Mi Chomocho (Pesach)	Arvit L'yom Tov	SATB choir
SZ I	p.78	No.47	Hapores L'Shavu'ot	Arvit L'yom Tov	SATBB choir
SZ I	p.79	No.48	Wajedaber Moscheh (Pesach/Shavu'ot)	Arvit L'yom Tov	SATB choir
SZ I	p.79	No.49	Wajedaber (Shavu'ot)	Arvit L'yom Tov	SATB choir
SZ I	p.79	No.50	Jigdal	Arvit L'yom Tov	SATB choir with solos up to SATTBB
SZ I	p.83	No.51	Hoel	Shacharit L'yom Tov	SATB choir
SZ I	p.83	No.52	K'duschoh	Shacharit L'yom Tov	SATB choir with occasional splitting of B part
SZ I	p.85	No.53	Halelujoh, Psalm 113	Shacharit L'yom Tov	SATB choir with solos
SZ I	p.87	No.54	B'zes Jisroel, Psalm 114	Shacharit L'yom Tov	SATB choir
SZ I	p.89	No.55	Hodu L'Pesach, Psalm 118	Shacharit L'yom Tov	TTBB solo, then SATB refrain, then SATB

					solos followed by refrain
SZ I	p.90	No.56	Hodu L'Shavu'ot, Psalm 118	Shacharit L'yom Tov	TTBB solo, then SATB refrain, then SATB solos followed by refrain
SZ I	p.91	No.57	Hodu L'Sukkot, Psalm 118	Shacharit L'yom Tov	SATB solos followed by SATB refrains
SZ I	p.92	No.58	Odecho Ki Anisoni, Psalm 118.21	Shacharit L'yom Tov	T solo, then SATB choir
SZ I	p.92	No.59	Ono, Psalm 118.25	Shacharit L'yom Tov	TTBB solo, then SAB choir
SZ I	p.93	No.60	En Komocho	Shacharit L'yom Tov	T solo with SATB choir and solos
SZ I	p.95	No.61	Scholosch Esre Midos	Shacharit L'yom Tov	SAB choir with S solo
SZ I	p.96	No.62	Schiwisi, Psalm 16.8 bis Ende	Shacharit L'yom Tov	SATB choir
SZ I	p.99	No.63	S'u Scheorim, Psalm 24.7 bis Ende	Shacharit L'yom Tov	T solo, SAB choir
SZ I	p.100	No.64	Ez Chajim	Shacharit L'yom Tov	T solo with SATB choir
SZ I	p.102	No.65	K'duschoh L'musaf	Shacharit L'yom Tov	SATTB choir with solos
SZ I	p.105	No.66	Adir	Shacharit L'yom Tov	SATB choir with solos
SZ I	p.106	No.67	Weseeraw	Shacharit L'yom Tov	SATBB choir
SZ I	p.107	No.68	Bircas Kohanim	Shacharit L'yom Tov	SABB choir, Hazzan, Kohanim
SZ I	p.110	No.69	L'simchas Torah (Ana Bish'at Hakafa), Psalm 118.25	Shacharit L'yom Tov	T solo, SABB response
SZ I	p.110	No.70	En Kelohenu	Shacharit L'yom Tov	SAB choir, then STB solo, then return to choir
SZ I	p.113	No.71	Borechu	Arvit L'Rosh Hashana	SATB solo, then SATB choir
SZ I	p.113	No.72	Umaawir Jom	Arvit L'Rosh Hashana	T solo, then SATB choir
SZ I	p.114	No.73	Sch'ma Jisroel	Arvit L'Rosh Hashana	TTBB choir
SZ I	p.114	No.74	Mi Chomocho	Arvit L'Rosh Hashana	SATB choir
SZ I	p.114	No.75	Tikeu Wachodesch Schofor	Arvit L'Rosh Hashana	T solo, SATB choir
SZ I	p.115	No.76	Kadisch	Arvit L'Rosh Hashana	SATB choir
SZ I	p.115	No.77	Jigdal	Arvit L'Rosh Hashana	SATB choir with solos
SZ I	p.119	No.78	Hamelech	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	T solo with SATB choir

SZ I	p.120	No.79	Jozer Meschoresim	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	B solo
SZ I	p.120	No.80	Boruch Atoh	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	B solo
SZ I	p.121	No.81	Soch'renu	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	SATB choir
SZ I	p.121	No.82	Mi Chomocho	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	SATB choir
SZ I	p.121	No.83	Jimloch	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	SATB choir
SZ I	p.121	No.84	W'atoh Kodosch	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	SATB choir
SZ I	p.122	No.85	Melech Eljon	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	T solo with SATB choir
SZ I	p.123	No.86	B'sefer Chajim	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	SAB choir
SZ I	p.123	No.87	Owinu Malkenu	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	T solo with SAB choir
SZ I	p.126	No.88	Owinu Malkenu Kos'wenu	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	T solo with SAB choir
SZ I	p.128	No.89	En Komocho	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	SATB choir with solos
SZ I	p.131	No.90	Sch'ma Jisroel	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	SATB choir
SZ I	p.131	No.91	Echod Elohenu	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	SATBB choir
SZ I	p.132	No.92	Gadelu, Lecho Adonoj	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	T solo, SATB choir
SZ I	p.133	No.93	Kadisch (Likrat HaTorah)	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	T solo
SZ I	p.133	No.94	Aschre Hoom Jodee S'ruoh	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	T solo, then SAB choir
SZ I	p.134	No.95	Kadisch	Musaf L'Rosh Hashana	T solo with SATB choir and solos
SZ I	p.136	No.96	Boruch Atoh	Musaf L'Rosh Hashana	B solo with SATB choir
SZ I	p.137	No.97	El Emuno	Musaf L'Rosh Hashana	T solo, then SATB choir
SZ I	p.138	No.98	Uwechen Ulecho Saaleh Keduschoh	Musaf L'Rosh Hashana	T solo, then SATB choir
SZ I	p.138	No.99	B'rosch Haschono	Musaf L'Rosh Hashana	SAB choir with T solo interspersed
SZ I	p.139	No.100	Useschuwoh	Musaf L'Rosh Hashana	SATB choir
SZ I	p.139	No.101	Watoh	Musaf L'Rosh Hashana	SATB choir
SZ I	p.140	No.102	En Kizewoh	Musaf L'Rosh Hashana	SATB choir
SZ I	p.141	No.103	K'sod Siach	Musaf L'Rosh Hashana	SATTB choir with solos
SZ I	p.145	No.104	K'duschoh	Musaf L'Rosh Hashana	SATTB choir with solos
SZ I	p.148	No.105	Olenu	Musaf L'Rosh Hashana	T solo
SZ I	p.149	No.106	Waanachnu Kor'im	Musaf L'Rosh Hashana	SAB choir
SZ I	p.149	No.107	M'loch	Musaf L'Rosh Hashana	SATTBB choir with solos
SZ I	p.152	No.108	Hajom Haras Olom	Musaf L'Rosh Hashana	SAB choir

SZ I	p.153	No.109	Halelujoh, Psalm 150	Musaf L'Rosh Hashana	SAB choir
SZ I	p.154	No.110	Hajom T'amezenu	Musaf L'Rosh Hashana	SATB choir with solos
SZ I	p.156	No.111	Kol Nid're	L'Yom Kippur	SAB choir with T solo
SZ I	p.157	No.112	Wenislach	L'Yom Kippur	SATB choir with solos
SZ I	p.158	No.113	Wajomer	L'Yom Kippur	SAB choir
SZ I	p.158	No.114	Micol Chatosechem	L'Yom Kippur	SATB choir
SZ I	p.158	No.115	Jaaleh	L'Yom Kippur	each verse has different combo of solo voices and choral responses
SZ I	p.160	No.116	Jaaleh	L'Yom Kippur	SATB choir with TBB solo
SZ I	p.161	No.117	Kaper Chatoenu	L'Yom Kippur	SATB choir with solo
SZ I	p.163	No.118	Elohenu Weelohe Awosenu Selach Lonu	L'Yom Kippur	SATB choir
SZ I	p.163	No.119	Ki Onu Amecho	L'Yom Kippur	SATB choir
SZ I	p.164	No.120	Ono Towo	L'Yom Kippur	SATTB choir with solo
SZ I	p.167	No.121	Oschamnu	L'Yom Kippur	T solo with SAB responses
SZ I	p.168	No.122	Sarnu	L'Yom Kippur	SAB choir
SZ I	p.168	No.123	W'al Kulom	L'Yom Kippur	SAB choir
SZ I	p.168	No.124	Imeru Le'lohim	Musaf L'Yom Kippur	T solo with SABB responses
SZ I	p.169	No.125	Wechach Hojoh Omer	Musaf L'Yom Kippur	T solo with SAB responses
SZ I	p.170	No.126	W'hakohanim	Musaf L'Yom Kippur	T solo, SATB choir
SZ I	p.171	No.127	Pizmon	Musaf L'Yom Kippur	B solo, unison choir
SZ I	p.172	No.128	Kadisch L'neiloh	L'Neila	T solo with SATB choir
SZ I	p.172	No.129	Gosch	L'Neila	B solo
SZ I	p.173	No.130	Jisroel Noscha	L'Neila	B solo with SATB responses
SZ I	p.173	No.131	Owinu Malkenu	L'Neila	ST solo, SATB choir, TTBB solo, SATB choir, T solo, SATB choir
SZ I	p.177	No.132	B'rochoh L'Purim	L'Purim	SATB solo, then SATB choir
SZ I	p.177	No.133	Lajehudim	L'Purim	SATB choir with solos
SZ I	p.177	No.134	Ki Mordechaj Hajehudi	L'Purim	SATB choir with solos
SZ I	p.178	No.135	L'choh Dodi (L'Schabas Hozon)	L'Purim	SATTB choir with solos

SZ I	p.182	No.136	Borechu	L'Tisha B'Av	SATB solo, then SATB choir
SZ I	p.183	No.137	Birchos Schema	L'Tisha B'Av	T solo, then SATB choir
SZ I	p.183	No.138	Schema Jisroel	L'Tisha B'Av	T solo with STB, then SATB choir, no Baruch sheim k'vod
SZ I	p.184	No.139	Mi Chomocho	L'Tisha B'Av	SATB choir
SZ I	p.184	No.140	Haschiwenu	L'Tisha B'Av	SAB choir
SZ I	p.184	No.141	B'lel Seh	L'Tisha B'Av	SAB choir
SZ I	p.184	No.142	Weoholiwoh	L'Tisha B'Av	SAB choir
SZ I	p.184	No.143	Ad Onoh	L'Tisha B'Av	SAB choir
SZ I	p.185	No.144	Ki Nicham	L'Tisha B'Av	SATB choir
SZ I	p.185	No.145	L'cho Adonoj Hageduloh	L'Tisha B'Av	SATB choir
SZ I	p.185	No.146	Hodo al Erez	L'Tisha B'Av	SATB choir
SZ I	p.186	No.147	Al Naharos Bowel	L'Tisha B'Av	SAATB choir with solos
SZ I	p.187	No.148	Eli Zijon	L'Tisha B'Av	SAB choir
SZ I	p.191	No.149	Bor'chi Nafschi, Psalm 103	Casual-Gesange	SATTB choir with solos
SZ I	p.196	No.150	Halelujoh, Odeh Adonoj, Psalm 111	Casual-Gesange	B solo with SATBB choir
SZ I	p.199	No.151	Mi Adir	L'nisuin	SATTB choir with solos
SZ I	p.200	No.152	Meheroh	L'nisuin	SS solo with SATB choir
SZ I	p.202	No.153	Meheroh	L'nisuin	S solo with SATB choir
SZ I	p.204	No.154	Hazur Tamim	L'hal'vayeit Meitim	SATB choir
SZ I	p.205	No.155	Schochne Bote Chomer	L'hal'vayeit Meitim	SATTB with solos
SZ I	p.208	No.156	Yoschew Beseser Psalm 91	L'hal'vayeit Meitim	T solo, SATB choir
SZ I	p.210	No.157	Schiwisi, Psalm 16, verses 8, 9	L'hal'vayeit Meitim	SATB choir
SZ I	p.210	No.158	Ach Elohim, Psalm 49, verse 16 bis Ende	L'hal'vayeit Meitim	SATB choir with solos
SZ I	p.212	No.159	Adonoj Beos'cho Jismach Melech, Psalm 21, verse 1-9	L'hal'vayeit Meitim	T solo with SATB choir
SZ II	p.3	No.1	L'choh Dodi	Kabbalat Shabbat	verse=cantor with BB, refrain=SATB choir
SZ II	p.3	No.2	L'choh Dodi	Kabbalat Shabbat	verse=cantor with BB, refrain=SATB choir

SZ II	p.3	No.3	Schomor W'sochor	Kabbalat Shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.4	No.4	Likras Schabbos	Kabbalat Shabbat	SATB choir
SZ II	p.4	No.5	Mikdasch Melech	Kabbalat Shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.5	No.6	Mikdasch Melech	Kabbalat Shabbat	TTBB choir, then SATB choir
SZ II	p.6	No.7	Mikdasch Melech	Kabbalat Shabbat	SATTB choir with organ accompaniment (!)
SZ II	p.8	No.8	Hisna'ari	Kabbalat Shabbat	SATB choir
SZ II	p.9	No.9	Schomor W'sochor	Kabbalat Shabbat	Cantor with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.9	No.10	Mikdasch Melech	Kabbalat Shabbat	Cantor with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.10	No.11	Hisor'ri	Kabbalat Shabbat	SATB choir with solos
SZ II	p.11	No.12	Hisor'ri	Kabbalat Shabbat	SATB choir
SZ II	p.13	No.13	Hisor'ri	Kabbalat Shabbat	SSAATTBB choir
SZ II	p.15	No.14	V'hoju Limschisoh	Kabbalat Shabbat	SATB choir
SZ II	p.16	No.15	V'hoju Limschisoh	Kabbalat Shabbat	SATB choir with some solos and divisi
SZ II	p.18	No.16	V'hoju Limschisoh	Kabbalat Shabbat	TTB choir
SZ II	p.19	No.17	Boi Vescholom	Kabbalat Shabbat	SATB choir
SZ II	p.20	No.18	Tov L'hodos	Kabbalat Shabbat	SATB choir
SZ II	p.21	No.19	Adonoj Moloch	Kabbalat Shabbat	SATB choir
SZ II	p.23	No.20	Borchu	Arvit L'shabbat	Cantor with SATB solo/choral responses
SZ II	p.23	No.21	U'ma'avir Jom	Arvit L'shabbat	Cantor with SATB choral responses
SZ II	p.23	No.22	L'ma'an Jirbu	Arvit L'shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.24	No.23	W'lo Sosuru	Arvit L'shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.24	No.23	Ani Adonoj Elohechem	Arvit L'shabbat	SATB choir followed by cantor
SZ II	p.24	No.24	Mi Chomochoh	Arvit L'shabbat	SATB choir
SZ II	p.24	No.25	Mal'chus'cho	Arvit L'shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.25	No.26	Adonoj Jimloch	Arvit L'shabbat	SATB choir
SZ II	p.25	No.27	W'ne'emar	Arvit L'shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.25	No.28	Haschkivenu	Arvit L'shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.26	No.29	U'v'zel K'nofecho	Arvit L'shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative

SZ II	p.26	No.29	Ki Eil Schom'renu	Arvit L'shabbat	SATB choir with cantorial recitative to conclude
SZ II	p.26	No.30	W'schom'ru	Arvit L'shabbat	Interplay between unison choir, SATB choir, and cantor
SZ II	p.27	No.31	Jisgadal (Kaddish)	Arvit L'shabbat	Cantor a cappella, then with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.27	No.31	Omen J'he Sch'meh Rabo (Kaddish)	Arvit L'shabbat	Choir unison
SZ II	p.27	No.31	Jisborach (Kaddish)	Arvit L'shabbat	Cantor a cappella, then with organ accompaniment, concludes a cappella
SZ II	p.28	No.32	Bor'chu	Arvit L'shabbat (in alter Weise)	Cantor with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.28	No.33	Boruch Adonoj Ham'voroch	Arvit L'shabbat (in alter Weise)	SATB choir, cantor, SATB choir "Amen"
SZ II	p.28	No.34	U'ma'avir Jom	Arvit L'shabbat (in alter Weise)	Cantor with organ accompaniment, SATB responses
SZ II	p.29	No.35	W'nismach	Arvit L'shabbat (in alter Weise)	Cantor a cappella, then with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.29	No.36	Waj'chulu	Arvit L'shabbat (in alter Weise)	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.29	No.37	Boruch Atoh (Koneh Schomajim)	Arvit L'shabbat (in alter Weise)	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.30	No.38	Boruch Atoh (Koneh Schomajim)	Arvit L'shabbat (in alter Weise)	Cantorial solo recitative (ossia)
SZ II	p.30	No.39	Mogen Ovos	Arvit L'shabbat (in alter Weise)	Unison voice (unspecified), then SATB choir, alternated throughout
SZ II	p.31	No.40	Kiddusch	Arvit L'shabbat (in alter Weise)	Cantorial solo recitative with unison to 3-part choral responses
SZ II	p.32	No.41	Adon Olom	Arvit L'shabbat (in alter Weise)	SATB choir and solo in various permutations
SZ II	p.34	No.42	Adon Olom	Arvit L'shabbat (in alter Weise)	SATB choir and solo in various permutations
SZ II	p.37	No.43	Adon Olom	Arvit L'shabbat (in alter Weise)	SATB choir and solo in various permutations
SZ II	p.39	No.44	Jigdal	Shacharit L'shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.39	No.45	Birchos Hashochor	Shacharit L'shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.39	No.46	Schochen Ad	Shacharit L'shabbat	Cantorial solo

					recitative
SZ II	p.39	No.47	B'rochos W'hodoos	Shacharit L'shabbat	Cantorial recitative with SATB choral "Baruch hu"
SZ II	p.39	No.47	El Melech	Shacharit L'shabbat	Cantorial recitative with choral unison "Amen"
SZ II	p.40	No.48	Kaddisch	Shacharit L'shabbat	Cantor with SATB choral responses
SZ II	p.40	No.49	Boruch Atoh Adonoj, Yotzeir Or	Shacharit L'shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.40	No.50	Hacol Joducho	Shacharit L'shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.40	No.51	En K'erkecho	Shacharit L'shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.41	No.52	El Odon, Loel	Shacharit L'shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.41	No.53	Tisborach, Es Schem	Shacharit L'shabbat	Cantorial recitative with SATB choral "Baruch hu"
SZ II	p.41	No.53	K'duschoh Culom K'echod	Shacharit L'shabbat	Cantor with SATB choral responses
SZ II	p.41	No.53	Or Chodosch	Shacharit L'shabbat	Cantor with SATB solo/choral responses
SZ II	p.41	No.53	T'hilos, Schiroh Chadoshoh	Shacharit L'shabbat	Cantor with SATB choral responses
SZ II	p.41	No.54	Zur Jisroel	Shacharit L'shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.42	No.55	Schmoneh Esre (Boruch Atoh)	Shacharit L'shabbat	Cantor with SATB choral responses
SZ II	p.42	No.56	N'kadesch	Shacharit L'shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.42	No.57	Os B'kol	Shacharit L'shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.42	No.58	L'dor Wodor	Shacharit L'shabbat	Cantor with SATB choral responses
SZ II	p.43	No.59	Jismach Moscheh	Shacharit L'shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.43	No.59	W'schom'ru	Shacharit L'shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.43	No.60	Birkas Kohanim	Shacharit L'shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative with responses from alternate source
SZ II	p.43	No.61	Waj'hi Bin'soa	Shacharit L'shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.44	No.62	L'cho Adonoj Hag'duloh	Shacharit L'shabbat	SATB choir
SZ II	p.45	No.63	Mi Sch'berach	Shacharit L'shabbat	Cantor, then cantor with SATB choir

SZ II	p.46	No.64	J'chad'schehu	Birkat Hachodesh	SATB choir
SZ II	p.47	No.65	Hodo al Erez	Shacharit L'shabbat	SATB choir
SZ II	p.47	No.66	Uv'nuchoh Jomar	Shacharit L'shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.48	No.67	Haschivenu	Shacharit L'shabbat	SATB choir
SZ II	p.49	No.68	Kaddisch	Musaf L'shabbat	Cantor with SATB choral responses
SZ II	p.49	No.69	Boruch Atoh	Musaf L'shabbat	Cantor with organ accompaniment, SATB responses
SZ II	p.51	No.70	Atoh Gibor, Maschiv Horuach	Musaf L'shabbat	Cantor with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.52	No.71	(no name)	Musaf L'shabbat	Organ
SZ II	p.53	No.72	Na'aritzcho	Musaf L'shabbat	Cantor with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.53	No.72	Kodosch	Musaf L'shabbat	SATB choir with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.54	No.72	K'vodo	Musaf L'shabbat	Cantor with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.54	No.72	Boruch K'vod Adonoj Mimkomo	Musaf L'shabbat	SATB choir
SZ II	p.54	No.72	Mimkomo	Musaf L'shabbat	Cantor with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.55	No.73	Mimkomo	Musaf L'shabbat	Cantor with SAB accompaniment
SZ II	p.56	No.74	Mimkomo	Musaf L'shabbat	Cantor with SAB accompaniment
SZ II	p.57	No.75	Ticanto Schabos	Musaf L'shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.57	No.76	Jism'chu B'malchus'choh	Musaf L'shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.57	No.77	Elohenu Weelohe Avoseinu, R'zeh Vimnuchosenu	Musaf L'shabbat	Cantor with organ accompaniment, SATB responses
SZ II	p.59	No.78	Hoel Hakodosch, Atoh Jozarto	L'shabbat Rosh Chodesh	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.59	No.78	Ul'fi Schechotonu	L'shabbat Rosh Chodesh	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.59	No.79	Elohenu Weelohe Avoseinu, W'chadesch Olenu	L'shabbat Rosh Chodesh	Cantor with SATB choral responses
SZ II	p.60	No.80	Uvo L'zijon, Adonoj Chofez	Mincha shel Shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.60	No.81	Kaddisch	Mincha shel Shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.60	No.82	Waani	Mincha shel Shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative

SZ II	p.60	No.83	Atoh Echod	Mincha shel Shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.61	No.84	Elohenu Weelohe Avoseinu, R'zeh	Mincha shel Shabbat	Cantorial recitative with choral "Amen"
SZ II	p.61	No.85	Odom Uv'hemoh	Mincha shel Shabbat	Cantorial solo recitative
SZ II	p.62	No.86	L'Dovid Boruch Adonoj, Psalm 144	L'motza'ei Shabbat	SATB choir with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.63	No.86	Adonoj Moh Odom	L'motza'ei Shabbat	Baritone (cantor) with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.64	No.86	Elohim Schir Chodosch	L'motza'ei Shabbat	SATB choir with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.64	No.86	Hanosen T'schuoh	L'motza'ei Shabbat	Baritone (cantor) with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.65	No.86	Ascher Bonenu	L'motza'ei Shabbat	SATB choir with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.66	No.86	M'sovenu	L'motza'ei Shabbat	Baritone (cantor) with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.66	No.86	Aschre Hoom	L'motza'ei Shabbat	SATB choir with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.67	No.87	Lamnazeach Binginos, Psalm 67	L'motza'ei Shabbat	Baritone (cantor) with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.67	No.87	Elohim J'chonenu	L'motza'ei Shabbat	Baritone (cantor) with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.67	No.87	Lodaas	L'motza'ei Shabbat	SATB choir with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.68	No.87	Joducho	L'motza'ei Shabbat	SATB choir with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.68	No.87	Jism'chu	L'motza'ei Shabbat	Baritone (cantor) with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.69	No.87	Joducho	L'motza'ei Shabbat	SATB choir with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.69	No.87	J'vor'chenu	L'motza'ei Shabbat	Baritone (cantor) with SATB response
SZ II	p.69	No.88	W'hu Rachum	Ma'ariv	Cantor with SATB choral responses
SZ II	p.69	No.88	Bor'chu	Ma'ariv	Cantor with SATB choral responses
SZ II	p.69	No.88	Eil Chaj	Ma'ariv	Cantor with SATB choral responses
SZ II	p.73	No.89	Mah Tovu	Ma'ariv L'shalosh Regalim	SATB choir
SZ II	p.73	No.89	Adonoj Ohavti	Ma'ariv L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo recitative with SATB choral repetitions
SZ II	p.73	No.89	Wa'ani	Ma'ariv L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo with solo and choral SATB response
SZ II	p.74	No.90	Bor'chu	Ma'ariv L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo with SATB choral responses

SZ II	p.74	No.91	El Chaj	Ma'ariv L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.74	No.92	Lel Schimurim	Ma'ariv L'shalom Regalim	Cantorial solo with three-part choral response
SZ II	p.74	No.93	Moscheh Uw'ne Jisroel	Ma'ariv L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.74	No.94	Pesach	Ma'ariv L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.74	No.95	B'giloh	Ma'ariv L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.74	No.96	Mal'chus'cho (L'Pesach) Adonoj Yimloch (L'Pesach)	Ma'ariv L'shalosh Regalim	TTBB into SATB choir
SZ II	p.75	No.97	Weneemar/Lel Schimurim	Ma'ariv L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.75	No.98	Boruch atoh...goal jisroel	Ma'ariv L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo with three to four-part choral responses
SZ II	p.75	No.99	Melech Zur Jisroel/ Ki El	Ma'ariv L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.75	No.100	Hapores (L'Pesach)	Ma'ariv L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo with three-part choral response
SZ II	p.75	No.101	Hapores (L'Shavuot)	Ma'ariv L'shalosh Regalim	Unison SAT solo with SAA response, followed by unison SAT solo with SATB choral response
SZ II	p.76	No.102	Hapores (L'Sukot)	Ma'ariv L'shalosh Regalim	SATB choir
SZ II	p.76	No.103	Waj'daber Moscheh	Ma'ariv L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo followed by SATB choir with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.76	No.104	Kidusch	Ma'ariv L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo with choral response
SZ II	p.76	No.105	Schehech'jonu	Ma'ariv L'shalosh Regalim	TTBB solo
SZ II	p.77	No.106	Jigdal	Ma'ariv L'shalosh Regalim	SATB choir
SZ II	p.80	No.106	Jigdal (Sephardic melody)	Ma'ariv L'shalosh Regalim	Solo voice with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.81	No.107	Jigdal	Ma'ariv L'shalosh Regalim	SATB choir
SZ II	p.85	No.108	Schochen Ad	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	SATB choir
SZ II	p.86	No.109	Yozer Or	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.86	No.110	Z'enoh Ur'enoh	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.86	No.111	Chaj Sackenu	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.86	No.112	Cholim Soim	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.86	No.113	Al Horischonim	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo with unison response

SZ II	p.86	No.114	B'rach Dodi	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	SATB chorus and cantorial solo verses
SZ II	p.88	No.115	Big'lal Ovos	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	SATB choir with cantorial solo on chatima
SZ II	p.89	No.116	Melech Oser	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.89	No.117	Misod	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.89	No.118	Boruch	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.89	No.119	T'chasek Jodajim	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.89	No.120	Jimloch	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo with SATB choral response
SZ II	p.89	No.121	W'atoh Kodosch	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo with SAB choral response
SZ II	p.89	No.122	Rizuj Sch'loschoh Eleh	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.89	No.123	El No Hoel Sam'ru	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo, then SATB choir (repeated twice)
SZ II	p.90	No.124	L'dor Wodor	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo with choral response
SZ II	p.90	No.125	Atoh V'chartonu	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.91	No.126	Elohenu Welohe Avosenu Jaaleh W'jovo	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo with unison choral responses
SZ II	p.92	No.127	Boruch	Hallel	Cantorial solo with SATB choral response on “Hal'lujoh”
SZ II	p.92	No.128	Präludium (L'Pesach)	Hallel	Organ
SZ II	p.93	No.129	Präludium II (L'Shavuot)	Hallel	Organ
SZ II	p.93	No.130	Präludium III (L'Sukkot)	Hallel	Organ
SZ II	p.94	No.131	Hal'lu Es Adonoj	Hallel	Cantorial solo with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.94	No.132	Hodo	Hallel	Cantorial solo with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.94	No.133	Min Hamezar	Hallel	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.94	No.134	Seh Hajom	Hallel	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.94	No.135	Ono Adonoj	Hallel	Cantorial solo, then SATB choir, both with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.95	No.136	Ki Meolom	Hallel	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.95	No.137	Hodu	Hallel	Cantor with SATB choral accompaniment,

					then TTBB
SZ II	p.96	No.138	Ono	Hallel	Cantor with BB accompaniment
SZ II	p.96	No.139	Waj'hi Binesoa Ki Mizijon	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo with organ accompaniment, then SATB choir with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.97	No.140	Adonoj Adonoj	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.98	No.141	L'cho Adonoj W'hag'duloh	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	SATB choir
SZ II	p.99	No.142	Rom'mu	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	SATB choir
SZ II	p.100	No.143	Akdomos	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.101	No.144	Mi Chomocho (L'shirat Hayam)	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	TTBB, then SATTBB
SZ II	p.101	No.145	Oschiroh	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.101		Adonoj Isch Mil'chomoh	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo accompanied by TBB
SZ II	p.102	No.146	J'min'cho	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	TTBB choir
SZ II	p.102	No.147	K'vodo	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo accompanied by ATB
SZ II	p.103	No.148	Mim'komo	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo accompanied by ATB
SZ II	p.104	No.149	K'vodo	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	SSSA choir, then TTBB choir
SZ II	p.104	No.150	Mim'komo	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	T with SSSA responses, followed by SATB choir
SZ II	p.105	No.151	Os Schesch Meos	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.105	No.152	Weseerav	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo with organ accompaniment, SATB choral responses
SZ II	p.106	No.153	Bircas Kohanim	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo and SATB choir with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.108	No.154	Bircas Kohanim	Shacharit L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo, SATB choir, and Kohanim with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.113	No.155	Hoshonoh	L'Hoshana Raba L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo with SATB responses
SZ II	p.114	No.156	L'maan Schim'mos Iroch L'ma'an Tol'dos	B'hakafa Sh'vi'it L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo with SATB choral responses
SZ II	p.114	No.158	L'cho Adonoj Hageduloh	L'shalosh Regalim	SATB choir
SZ II	p.115	No.159	Uv'soros'cho Cosuv Lemor	L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo

SZ II	p.115	No.160	Sch'ma Jisroel	L'shalosh Regalim	Two versions: 1. Cantorial solo with SABB choral accompaniment; 2. SATB choir
SZ II	p.115	No.161	Boruch Schem K'vod Mal'chuso L'olom Woed	L'shalosh Regalim	SATB choir
SZ II	p.115	No.162	Ani Woho	L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo with SATB response
SZ II	p.115	No.163	K'hoschato	L'shalosh Regalim	SATB choral introduction followed by either cantorial solo or TBB choir, followed by SATB choral response
SZ II	p.117	No.164	K'hoschato	L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.117	No.165	Ono Hoschioh No	L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.117	No.166	Rachem No K'hal	L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo with TB choral accompaniment
SZ II	p.118	No.167	Rachem No K'hal	L'shalosh Regalim	SATB choir
SZ II	p.119	No.168	Schaare Schomajim	L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo with SABB solo/choral accompaniment
SZ II	p.119	No.169	Kol M'vaser	L'shalosh Regalim	Two options: 1. Cantorial solo; 2. SATB unison choir
SZ II	p.119	No.170	Omez Jischecho Bo	L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo with SATB unison choral response
SZ II	p.119	No.171	L'maan Daas	L'shalosh Regalim	Cantorial solo with SATB choral response
SZ II	p.120	No.172	Kadisch Jisborach L'elo	L'Geshem/L'Tal	Cantorial solo with SATB choral responses
SZ II	p.121	No.173	Kadisch	L'Geshem/L'Tal	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.122	No.174	Boruch Atoh	L'Geshem/L'Tal	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.122	No.175	B'dato	L'Geshem/L'Tal	Cantorial solo with TB choral accompaniment
SZ II	p.123	No.176	B'dato	L'Geshem/L'Tal	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.123	No.177	Af B'ri	L'Geshem/L'Tal	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.123	No.178	Atoh Gibor T'filas G'vuros Tal	L'Geshem/L'Tal	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.123	No.179	Elohenu Welohe Avosenu	L'Geshem/L'Tal	Cantorial solo; mostly accompanied by TB choir
SZ II	p.124	No.180	Tal Zaweh	L'Geshem/L'Tal	SATB choir

SZ II	p.124	No.181	Tal Nofes	L'Geshem/L'Tal	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.124	No.182	Tal Jaasis	L'Geshem/L'Tal	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.124	No.183	Scheatoh Hu	L'Geshem/L'Tal	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.124	No.184	Liv'rochoh	L'Geshem/L'Tal	Cantorial solo with choral “omen”
SZ II	p.125	No.185	Tal Ten L'razos Arzoch Rov Dogon	L'Geshem/L'Tal	Cantorial solo followed by SATB choir
SZ II	p.125	No.186	Tal Zaweh Ir Kasucoh Noseres	L'Geshem/L'Tal	TTBB choir followed by SATB choir
SZ II	p.126	No.187	S'chor Ov B'avuro	L'Geshem/L'Tal	Cantor with BB choral accompaniment (with SSA response)
SZ II	p.127	No.188	S'chor Hanolod B'zidko	L'Geshem/L'Tal	Cantorial solo followed by SATB choir
SZ II	p.127	No.189	S'chor Moschuj	L'Geshem/L'Tal	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.128	No.190	Atoh Horeso Lodaas J'hi Ch'vod	L'Simchat Torah	Cantorial solo with SATB choral responses
SZ II	p.128	No.191	En Comocho	L'Simchat Torah	TTBB choir followed by cantorial solo
SZ II	p.129	No.192	Ov Horachamim	L'Simchat Torah	SATB choir
SZ II	p.130	No.193	Ono	L'Simchat Torah	Cantorial solo with SATB choral responses
SZ II	p.131	No.194	En Kelohenu Nodeh Lelohenu	L'Simchat Torah	SATB choir with SAA solo section
SZ II	p.133	No.195	Ogil W'esmach	L'Simchat Torah	SATB choir
SZ II	p.134	No.196	Os Bik'schov Onow	L'Simchat Torah	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.135	No.197	R'schus (L'chatan Torah)	L'Simchat Torah	Cantorial solo, then SATB choir, then cantorial solo, then TTBB choir, then SATB choir
SZ II	p.136	No.198	R'schus (L'chatan Torah)	L'Simchat Torah	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.137	No.199	R'schus (L'chatan B'reshit)	L'Simchat Torah	Alternating between cantorial solo and SATB choir
SZ II	p.138	No.200	Waj'hi Erev (B'kri'at Parashat B'reshit)	L'Simchat Torah	SATB choir with cantor
SZ II	p.141	No.201	Adonoj Elohechem	Ma'ariv L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo with SATB choral response
SZ II	p.141	No.202	Hapores	Ma'ariv L'Rosh Hashana	TTBB choir with SATB “omen”
SZ II	p.141	No.203	Kadisch	Ma'ariv L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.142	No.204	Kidusch	Ma'ariv L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo with choral responses,

			Schehech'jonu		"Schehech'jonu" begins with cantorial solo and ends SACantorB choir
SZ II	p.143	No.205	Jigdal	Ma'ariv L'Rosh Hashana	SATB choir
SZ II	p.146	No.206	Jigdal	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.146	No.207	Adon Olom	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.146	No.208	Boruch Scheomar	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo with unison choral responses
SZ II	p.146	No.209	Boruch...El Molech	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo with unison choral responses
SZ II	p.146	No.210	Kadisch	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo with unison choral responses
SZ II	p.147	No.211	Bor'chu	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo with unison choral responses
SZ II	p.147	No.212	Boruch...Jozer Or	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo with three-part choral responses
SZ II	p.147	No.213	Melech Boasoroh	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.147	No.214	Bochen Col Eschtonos	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.147	No.215	Sch'eh Schawas Am	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.147	No.216	L'umosom	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.147	No.217	Or Chodosch	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo with unison choral responses
SZ II	p.148	No.218	Zur Jisroel	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.148	No.219	Misod	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.148	No.220	B'schofor Afatenu	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.148	No.221	Melech Oser	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.148	No.222	Toir W'soria	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.148	No.223	Rom Al Col Melech	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.149	No.224	Aafid Neser Ojom	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.149	No.225	Aafid Neser Ojom	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo (a cappella)
SZ II	p.150	No.226	Adonoj Melech	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo followed by SATB choir
SZ II	p.150	No.227	Adire Ajumoh	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo with SATB solo and choral accompaniment
SZ II	p.150	No.228	Adire Ajumoh	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.151	No.229	Uv'chen L'cho Hacol	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.151	No.230	K'duscho	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.151	No.231	Mim'kom'cho	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo

SZ II	p.151	No.232	L'dor Wodor	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.151	No.233	Uv'chen Ten	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.152	No.234	Sch'ma Jisroel	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo followed by SATB choir
SZ II	p.152	No.235	Gad'lu	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.152	No.236	W'jaasor	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo with unison choral response
SZ II	p.152	No.237	(No Name) Elohechem Chajjim	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.152	No.238	N'ginos (B'krias HaTorah) [trope]	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.152	No.239	J'hal'lu	Shacharit L'Rosh Hashana	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.153	No.240	T'kias Schofar [instructions and musical piece]	T'kiat Shofar	Shofar solo accompanied by SATB choir
SZ II	p.155	No.241	El Melech	T'kiat Shofar	Cantorial solo with unison choral response
SZ II	p.155	No.242	Uv'schofor Godol	T'kiat Shofar	Cantorial solo accompanied by SATB choir at end of piece
SZ II	p.156	No.243	K'vakoras	T'kiat Shofar	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.156	No.244	Mi Jonuach Us'schuvoh	T'kiat Shofar	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.156	No.245	Emes	T'kiat Shofar	Cantor with SATB choral accompaiment
SZ II	p.157	No.246	W'atoh Hu Melech	T'kiat Shofar	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.158	No.247	En Kiz'voh	T'kiat Shofar	TTBB choir
SZ II	p.159	No.248	Aseh L'maan Sch'mecho	T'kiat Shofar	TTBB choir
SZ II	p.159	No.249	Kakosuv	T'kiat Shofar	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.160	No.250	K'vodo	T'kiat Shofar	BI/BII solo followed by SATB choir
SZ II	p.160	No.251	Od Jiscor Lonu	T'kiat Shofar	Cantorial solo with small unsion section
SZ II	p.160	No.252	B'en Meliz Joscher	T'kiat Shofar	Cantorial solo with unsion choral responses
SZ II	p.162	No.253	Umipne Chatoenu	T'kiat Shofar	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.162	No.254	Mil'vad	T'kiat Shofar	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.162	No.255	Ochiloh	T'kiat Shofar	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.162	No.256	Tomech Mimisrach	T'kiat Shofar	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.163	No.257	Elohenu Weelohe Avosenu M'loch al Col Hoolom	T'kiat Shofar	Cantorial solo with TTB and SATB accompaniment
SZ II	p.165	No.258	Hajom Haras Olom	T'kiat Shofar	TTBB choir

SZ II	p.165	No.259	Aresches S'fasenu	T'kiat Shofar	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.166	No.260	Ki Socher Col Hanischcochos	T'kiat Shofar	Cantorial solo with SABB accompaniment
SZ II	p.167	No.261	T'ka B'schofor Godol	T'kiat Shofar	SATB choir (extends to SSAATTBB at times)
SZ II	p.168	No.262	Ki Atoh Schomea	T'kiat Shofar	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.169	No.263	W'seerav	T'kiat Shofar	Cantorial solo with SATB accompaniment
SZ II	p.171	No.264	Hajom T'am'zenu	T'kiat Shofar	TTBB solo with SATB choral responses
SZ II	p.172	No.265	Lo Al Azmi	Arvit Leil Kippur	Cantorial solo with SATB choral accompaniment
SZ II	p.175	No.265	W'nislach	Arvit Leil Kippur	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.175	No.266	S'lach No	Arvit Leil Kippur	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.175	No.267	Wajomer Adonoj	Arvit Leil Kippur	SATB choir
SZ II	p.175	No.268	Boruch Shem K'vod	Arvit Leil Kippur	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.176	No.269	Schomea T'filoh	Arvit Leil Kippur	Cantorial solo with unison choral responses
SZ II	p.176	No.270	Han'schomoh Loch	Arvit Leil Kippur	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.176	No.271	Osonu	Arvit Leil Kippur	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.176	No.272	Dark'cho	Arvit Leil Kippur	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.176	No.273	Dark'cho	Arvit Leil Kippur	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.176	No.274	L'maancho	Arvit Leil Kippur	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.177	No.275	Taaleh Aruchoh	Arvit Leil Kippur	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.177	No.276	Omnom Ken	Arvit Leil Kippur	BI/BII solo with SATB choral response; also cantorial solo, SATB and TTBB choir
SZ II	p.178	No.277	Ki Hine Kachomer	Arvit Leil Kippur	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.179	No.278	Os'cho Edrosch	Arvit Leil Kippur	Cantorial solo and unison choir
SZ II	p.179	No.279	Elohenu Weelohe Avosenu S'lach Lonu	Arvit Leil Kippur	Cantorial solo followed by TTBB choir
SZ II	p.180	No.280	Ki Onu Am'cho	Arvit Leil Kippur	TTBB choir, cantorial solo, and unison choir
SZ II	p.180	No.281	Ono Tovo	Arvit Leil Kippur	TTBB choir with SSAA responses
SZ II	p.182	No.282	Schim'cho Meolom	Arvit Leil Kippur	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.182	No.283	Uv'chen J'hi Rozon	Arvit Leil Kippur	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.182	No.284	Al Chet	Arvit Leil Kippur	Cantorial solo with choral responses

SZ II	p.182	No.285	W'al Chatoim	Arvit Leil Kippur	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.183	No.286	Boruch Atoh Adonoj...Haposeach	Yotzeir L'Yom Kippur	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.183	No.287	Boruch Schem K'vod	Yotzeir L'Yom Kippur	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.183	No.288	Kidusch	Yotzeir L'Yom Kippur	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.184	No.289	Ono S'lach No	Yotzeir L'Yom Kippur	Yotzeir L'Yom KippurCantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.184	No.290	Moreh Chatoim	Yotzeir L'Yom Kippur	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.184	No.291	Hajom Jicosev	Yotzeir L'Yom Kippur	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.185	No.292	Hoaderes W'hoemunoh	Yotzeir L'Yom Kippur	Baritone solo with organ accompaniment (German and Hebrew texts given)
SZ II	p.185	No.293	Se El Se Schoalim	Yotzeir L'Yom Kippur	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.186	No.294	S'lach Lonu Ovinu	S'lichot	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.186	No.295	Taavor Al Pescha	S'lichot	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.186	No.296	S'lach No Laawon	S'lichot	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.186	No.297	Sch'losch Esre Middos	S'lichot	Cantorial solo with unison choir
SZ II	p.187	No.298	Schofet Col Hoorez	S'lichot	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.187	No.299	Regesch Rachaschom	Musaf L'Yom Kippur	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.187	No.300	Nechoschev	Musaf L'Yom Kippur	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.187	No.301	Uv'chen Ach Chanun Oto	Musaf L'Yom Kippur	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.188	No.302	Masim	Seder Ha'avodah	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.188	No.303	Hoju Cor'im	Seder Ha'avodah	SATB choir
SZ II	p.189	No.304	W'chach Hojoh Moneh	Seder Ha'avodah	Cantorial solo with SATB choral accompaniment
SZ II	p.189	No.305	Aschre Ajin Roasoh Col Eleh	Seder Ha'avodah	Cantorial solo with SATB choir
SZ II	p.190	No.306	Ono Tovo	Seder Ha'avodah	SATB choir
SZ II	p.193	No.307	Misod	Ne'ilah	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.193	No.308	Pismon (S'chor B'ris Avrohom)	Ne'ilah	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.193	No.309	Pismon (Enkas M'saldecho)	Ne'ilah	Cantorial solo with choral responses

SZ II	p.194	No.310	Pismon (Jachbienu)	Ne'ilah	Cantorial solo with choral response
SZ II	p.194	No.311	Pismon (Adonoj Adonoj)	Ne'ilah	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.194	No.312	Ono Tovo	Ne'ilah	Cantorial solo with TTBB accompaniment; followed by SATB choir
SZ II	p.199	No.313	Jom Seh	Yom Kippur Katan	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.199	No.314	Kadisch	Yom Kippur Katan	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.199	No.315	Haschivenu	Yom Kippur Katan	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.199	No.316	Masas Capaj	Yom Kippur Katan	Cantorial solo with unison choir
SZ II	p.200	No.317	Bas Ami	Yom Kippur Katan	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.200	No.318	Bas Ami	Yom Kippur Katan	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.200	No.319	Rachamomo Idkar Lon	Yom Kippur Katan	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.200	No.320	Chatonu	Yom Kippur Katan	Cantorial solo with choral response
SZ II	p.200	No.321	Boruch Schem K'vod	Yom Kippur Katan	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.201	No.322	Adonoj Hu Hoelohim Adonoj Melech	Yom Kippur Katan	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.201	No.323	Malache Rachamim	Sheni V'chamishi Sheni	Cantorial solo with unison choir
SZ II	p.201	No.324	Sch'eh Neesor	Sheni V'chamishi Sheni	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.202	No.325	Chonenu	Pizmonim L'shov'vim Tav”Tav	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.202	No.326	El No	Pizmonim L'shov'vim Tav”Tav	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.202	No.327	W'al J'akev Chet	Pizmonim L'shov'vim Tav”Tav	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.203	No.328	Mikdasch Melech Hisnaari	L'Shabbat Hazon	TTBB choir followed by SATB choir
SZ II	p.204	No.329	L'cho Dodi	L'Shabbat Hazon	SATB choir
SZ II	p.204	No.330	Hapores	L'Shabbat Hazon	Cantorial solo followed by TTBB solo; SATB choral response at conclusion
SZ II	p.205	No.331	[Trope]	L'Tisha B'av	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.205	No.332	Eicha [trope]	L'Tisha B'av	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.205	No.333	Ki Rabos	L'Tisha B'av	Cantorial solo followed by SATB choir

SZ II	p.206	No.334	Tikro	L'Tisha B'av	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.206		Ascher Tipachti	L'Tisha B'av	SATB choir
SZ II	p.206	No.335	Ani Hagever	L'Tisha B'av	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.206	No.336	Titen Lohem Tirdof B'af	L'Tisha B'av	Cantorial solo followed by cantorial solo accompanied by SATB choir
SZ II	p.207	No.337	S'chor Adonoj Me Hojoh Lonu	L'Tisha B'av	TTBB choir with SAA responses
SZ II	p.208	No.338	Mizrajim Nosanu Jod Lomoh Lonezach	L'Tisha B'av	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.208	No.339	Haschivenu	L'Tisha B'av	SATB choir
SZ II	p.208	No.340	B'lel Seh	L'Tisha B'av	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.208	No.341	Ki Nicham Soson W'simchoh	L'Tisha B'av	SATB choir
SZ II	p.209	No.342	Schovas	L'Tisha B'av Baboker	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.209	No.343	Al Har Zijon	L'Tisha B'av Baboker	Unison choir with SATB choral response
SZ II	p.210	No.344	Lomoh Ruach Apenu	L'Tisha B'av Baboker	Cantorial solo with SATB accompaniment
SZ II	p.211	No.345	Zijon Halo Tishali	L'Tisha B'av Baboker	Cantorial solo with SATB choir
SZ II	p.214	No.346	Brachos L'hadlik Nerot Schehech'jonu	Hannukah	Cantorial solo with unison choral responses; TTB choir with SATB choral “omen”
SZ II	p.215	No.347	Haneros Halolu	Hannukah	Bass solo, TTBB choir, and SATB choir
SZ II	p.217	No.348	Mal'chus'cho Adonoj Jimloch W'neemar	Hannukah	SATB choir; cantorial solo
SZ II	p.218	No.349	B'rachos L'megilas Esther Scheosoh Nisim Schehechejonu	Purim	Cantorial solo with choral responses;TTBB choir
SZ II	p.219	No.350	[Megillat Esther Trope]	Purim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.219	No.351	Waj'hi Bime Achaschverosch Uvim'loos Wajjomer Homom	Purim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.219	No.352	W'chelim	Purim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.219	No.353	Lih'jos	Purim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.220	No.354	W'hanaaroh	Purim	Cantorial solo

SZ II	p.220	No.355	Ascher Hogloh	Purim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.220	No.356	Uv'hagia	Purim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.220	No.357	Wajeehav	Purim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.220	No.358	W'hoir Schushon	Purim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.220	No.359	Umord'chaj	Purim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.221	No.360	Rewach W'hazoloh	Purim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.221	No.361	W'chaascher Ovadti	Purim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.221	No.362	Sch'elosi	Purim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.221	No.363	W'chol Seh	Purim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.221	No.364	Balajloh Hahu	Purim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.221	No.365	Kach Es Hal'vusch	Purim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.221	No.366	Tinosen Li	Purim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.221	No.367	W'chol Maaseh	Purim	Cantorial solo
SZ II	p.225	No.368	Lied vor der Confirmation I	Confirmation	SATB choir
SZ II	p.226	No.369	Adonoj Adonenu (Psalm 8)	Confirmation	Cantorial solo with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.229	No.370	Lied nach der Confirmation III	Confirmation	SATB choir
SZ II	p.230	No.371	Boruch Habo/B'ruchoh Habooh	N'su'in	SATB choir
SZ II	p.230	No.372	Mi Adir	N'su'in	Cantorial solo with SATB choral accompaniment
SZ II	p.231	No.373	Bircas Erusin (U'sheva Brachos)	N'su'in	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.232	No.374	M'heroh	N'su'in	SATB choir
SZ II	p.234	No.375	M'heroh	N'su'in	SATB choir
SZ II	p.236	No.376	M'heroh	N'su'in	TTBB choir, SATB choir, TTBB choir
SZ II	p.237	No.377	Hazur Tomim/Zadik/ Boruch Hu/ Nefesch Col Chaj	Aninim Shonim	Cantorial solo with choral responses
SZ II	p.238	No.378	Joschev B'seser Ki Hu Jazil'cho Lo Siro Mipachad Ki Hu Jazil'choh Lo Siro Mipachad Midever Miketev Jipol Ur'vovoh	Aninim Shonim	Cantorial solo with choral responses

			Elecho Lo Jigosch
SZ II	p.240	No.379	Elohim B'osnenu Schomanu (Zur Installation des Gross-Rabiners in Triest)	Aninim Shonim	SATB choir
SZ II	p.242	No.380	Hineh Bor'chu (Psalm 134)	Aninim Shonim	SATB choir
SZ II	p.245	No.381	Od'cho Ki Anisoni (Psalm 118 verses 21-24)	Aninim Shonim	SATB choir
SZ II	p.245	No.382	Even Moasu Habonim	Aninim Shonim	TTBB choir
SZ II	p.246	No.383	Mees Adonoj	Aninim Shonim	SATB choir
SZ II	p.247	No.384	Seh Hajom	Aninim Shonim	Cantorial solo and SATB choir
SZ II	p.248	No.385	Zenu Ur'ena	Aninim Shonim	Organ solo
SZ II	p.249	No.386	El El Chaj	Aninim Shonim	Solo with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.250	No.387	El No	Aninim Shonim	Solo with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.251	No.388	Al Horischonim	Aninim Shonim	Solo with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.252	No.389	Psalm III	Aninim Shonim	SATB choir and baritone solo with organ accompaniment
SZ II	p.259	No.390	Psalm XXI	Aninim Shonim	SATB choir with organ accompaniment

Appendix B – Musical Examples (as a supplement to Chapter Four)

from Salomon Sulzer, Schir Zion, Out-of-Print Classics Series of Synagogue Music Volumes 6 and 7, New York: Sacred Music Press, 1954. (Adon Olom – Volume 6, p.57, B'rosch Hashonoh – Volume 7, pp.266-268, Way'chulu section – Volume 6, pp.53-54)

Sch Z. 1.
№ 354.
בראש השנה
Molto sostenuto.
Cantor.
Tenor.
Bass.
b'rôsch haschscho - noh jik-ko - se-wun u-w'- b'rôsch hasch-scho - noh jôm- zôm kip-pur j'cho - se-mun kam-moh ja-aw-kip-pur j'cho - se-mun run w'-cham-moh jib-bo-re-nu mi jich-jeh u-jib-bo-re-nu parlando mi jich-jeh u-mi jo-mus u-mi lô w'-kiz - zô mi
mi we-kiz-zô mi wam-
mi
u-mi woesch mi wa-che-rew u-mi wa-chaj-joh ma-jim
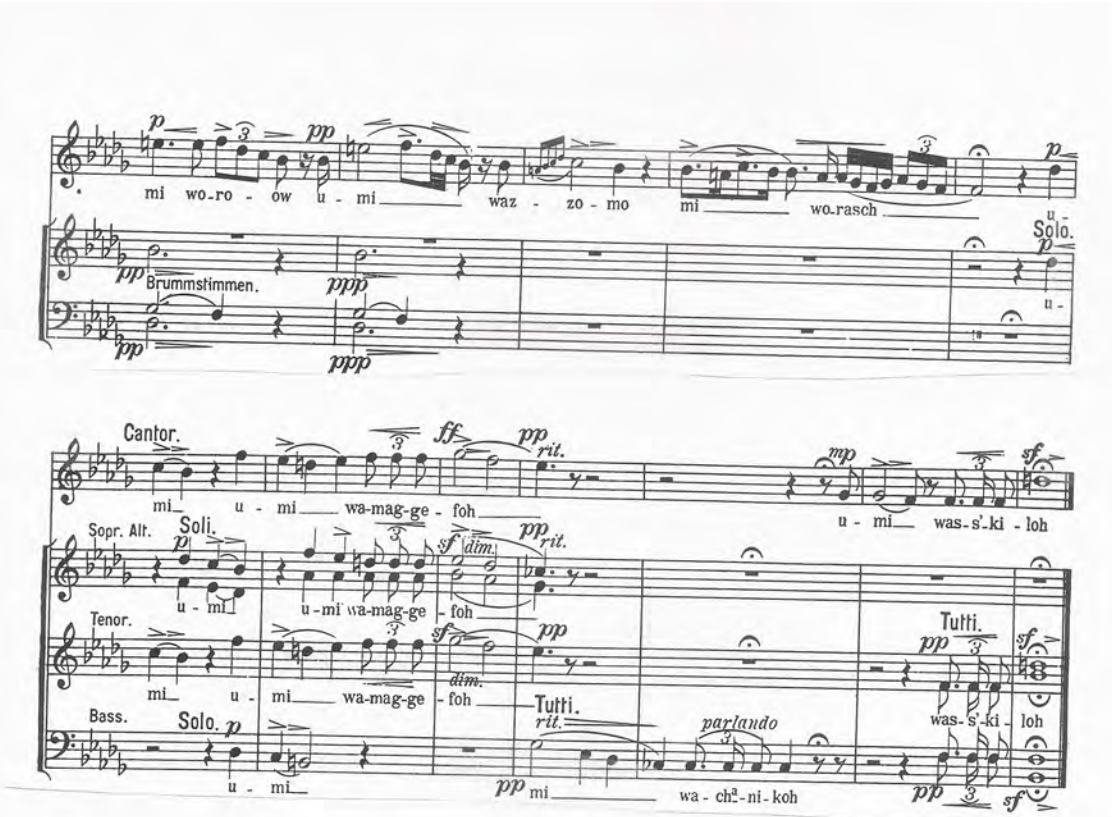
u-mi woesch mi wa-che-rew u-mi wa-chaj-joh



mi wo-ro - ow u - mi waz - zo - mo mi wo-rasch Brummstimmen.
Solo.
Cantor.
mi u - mi wa-mag-ge - foh
u - mi was-s'-ki - loh Sopr. Alt.
Soli.
u - mi
u-mi wa-mag-ge - foh Tenor.
mi u - mi wa-mag-ge - foh
Tutti.
Bass.
Solo.
u - mi
mi wa - ch^a-ni - koh parlando
was-s'-ki - loh

ויכלו
Sch. Z. II.
№ 42.
Cantor.
mezza voce.
wa-j'-chul-lu hasch-scho-ma jim w'ho-o-rez w'-chol z'-wo-om wa-j'-chal ẹ-lô-him baj-jôm ha-sch'-vi-i m'-lach-tô a-scher o-soh waj-jisch-bôs baj-jôm hasch-sch'-vii mic-col m'-lach-tô a-scher o-soh wa-j'-vo-rech ẹ-lô-him es jôm hasch-sch'-vi-i waj-j'-kad-desch ô-sô ki vô scho-vas mic-col m'-lach-tô a-scher bo-ro ẹ-lô-him la-a-sôs bo-ruch at-toh a-dô-noj Chor. Sopr.
Alt.
Tenor.
Bass.
bo-ruch hu o-wô-ruch sch'-mô
Cantor.
ẹ-lô-he-nu we-ẹlô-he â-vô-se-nu ẹ-lô-he aw-ro-hom ẹ-lô-he jiz-chok we-ẹlô-he ja-a-kôw ho-el hag-go-dôl haggib-bôr w'-han-nô-ro el el-jôn kô-neh scho-ma-jim wo-o-rez Sch. Z. II.
№ 43.
מגן אבות
Andante maestoso.
Sopran.
Alt.
Tenor.
Bass.
mo-gen o-vôs bi-d'-vo-rô m'chaj-jeh me-sim b'-ma-a-mo-rô ho-el hak-ko-dôsch sche-en co-ki vom ro-zoh lho-ni-ach lo-hem mô-hu ham-me-ni-ach l'-am-mô b'jôm schab-bas kod-schô lforit.
now na-a-vôd b'jir-oh wo-fa-chad w'nô-deh lI-sch'-mô b'-chol jôm to-mid me-en hab-bro-chôs el ha-hô-do-ôs â-dôn hasch-scho-lôm m'kad-desch hasch-schab-bos u-m'-vo-rech sch'vi-i u-me-ni-ach bi-k'-du-schoh lâm m'-du-sch'-ne ô-neg poco rit.

se-cher l'-ma-â-seh w're-schis
rit.
אלהינו ואלהי אבותינו
Sch.Z.II.
№ 44.
Cantor.
Religioso.
ẓ-lô-he-nu we-ẓ-lô-he â-vô-se-nu rẓ-zeh wim'-nu-cho-se-nu ka-d'-sche-nu b'-miz-wô-se-cho, w'sen chel-ke-nu b'-sô-ro-se-cho sa-b'-e-nu mi-tu-we-cho w'-sa-m'-che-nu bischu-o-se-cho w'-ta-her li-be-nu l'ow-de-cho be-ẓ-mes parlando
w'han-chi-le-nu â-do-noj ẓ-lô-he-nu bẓ-a-hâ-woh uw-ro-zôn schab-bas ko-d'-sche-cho w'-jo-nu chu wôh jis-ro-el m'-ka-d'-sche sch'-me-cho bo-ruch at-toh â-dô-noj Chor. Sopr.
Alt.
Ten.
Bass.
bo-ruch hu u-vô-ruch sch'-mô
Cantor.
m'kaddesch ha-schab-bos Chor.
o-men

Bibliography

Avenary, Hanoch. Kantor Salomon Sulzer und Seine Zeit – Eine Dokumentation. Sigmaringen: Jan Thorbecke, 1985. Unpublished translation by Caroline Sawyer.

Binder, A.W. "Salomon's Sulzer's Legacy to the Cantorate." Bulletin of the Jewish Liturgical Music Society of America, February 1967.

The Complete Artscroll Siddur. Rabbi Nosson Scherman, ed. New York: Mesorah Publications, 1984.

Ellenson, David. "The Israelitsche Gebetbücher of Abraham Geiger and Manuel Joël: A Study in Nineteenth-Century German-Jewish Communal Liturgy and Religion," After Emancipation: Jewish Religious Responses to Modernity. Cincinnati: Hebrew Union College Press, 2004.

_____. "The Mannheimer Prayerbooks and Modern Central European Communal Liturgies," Between Tradition and Culture: The Dialectics of Modern Jewish Religion and Identity. Atlanta, Georgia: Scholars Press, 1994.

Encyclopedia Judaica, first edition, online version. "Vienna." www.jewishencyclopedia.com. [accessed December 27, 2008]

Goldberg, Geoffrey. "Jewish Liturgical Music in the Wake of Nineteenth Century Reform." Sacred Sound and Social Change: Liturgical Music in Jewish and Christian Experience. Notre Dame, 1992, 59-83.

_____. "An Overview of Congregational Song in the German Synagogue up until the Shoah." Journal of Synagogue Music 30.1 (2005): 13-53.

Gradenwitz, Peter, "Jews in Austrian Music." The Jews of Austria: Essays on their Life, History and Destruction, Josef Fraenkel, ed. London: Vallentine Mitchell, 1967.

Guttman, A. "The Life of Salomon Sulzer." Year Book of the Central Conferences of American Rabbis, Volume XIV (1904): 227-236.

Heschel, Abraham Joshua. "The Vocation of the Cantor," The Insecurity of Freedom. Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 1966, reprinted by the American Conference of Cantors.

Hoffman, Lawrence. "The Liturgical Message," Gates of Understanding, Lawrence Hoffman, ed., New York: CCAR and UAHC, 1977.

Idelsohn, A.Z. Jewish Music in Its Historical Development. New York: Dover

Publications, 1992.

Kaiser, Rev. A. "Sulzer's Music." Year Book of the Central Conferences of American Rabbis, Volume XIV (1904): 237-243.

Mandell, Eric. "Salomon Sulzer 1804-1890." The Jews of Austria. Josef Fraenkel, ed. London: Vallentine Mitchell, 1967.

Mannheimer, Issac Noah. Tefilot Israel: Gebete der Israeliten. Vienna: Druck und Vering, 1846.

Meyer, Michael. Christian Influence in Early German Reform Judaism. New York: Ktav Publishing Company, 1971.

_____. Response to Modernity: A History of the Reform Movement in Judaism. Detroit: Wayne State University Press, 1988.

Miller, Malcolm. "Salomon Sulzer: a centenary observed." Musical Times, January 1991, volume cxxxii, Kent: Great Britain: 730.

The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 2001 edition. "Vienna."

Petuchowski, Jakob J. Prayerbook Reform in Europe: The Liturgy of European Liberal and Reform Judaism. New York: World Union for Progressive Judaism, Ltd., 1968.

Plaut, W. Gunther. The Rise of Reform Judaism. New York: World Union for Progressive Judaism, 1963.

Salomon Sulzer- Cantor, Composer, Innovator (English). Bregenz: Land Vorarlberg, 1991.

Sawyer, Caroline. "Salomon Sulzer (1804-1890) and His Times," Presentation Notes for "History of the Cantorate," Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion, New York City, February 13, 2007.

Sulzer, Salomon. Schir Zion. Volumes 1 (1840) and 2 (1865). [publisher]

Sulzer, Salomon. Schir Zion, Out-of-Print Classics Series of Synagogue Music Volumes 6, 7, and 8. New York: Sacred Music Press, 1954.

Werner, Eric. A Voice Still Heard…The Sacred Song of the Ashkenazic Jews. University Park: The Pennsylvania State University Press, 1976.

_____. From Generation to Generation. New York: American Conference of Cantors, 1967.